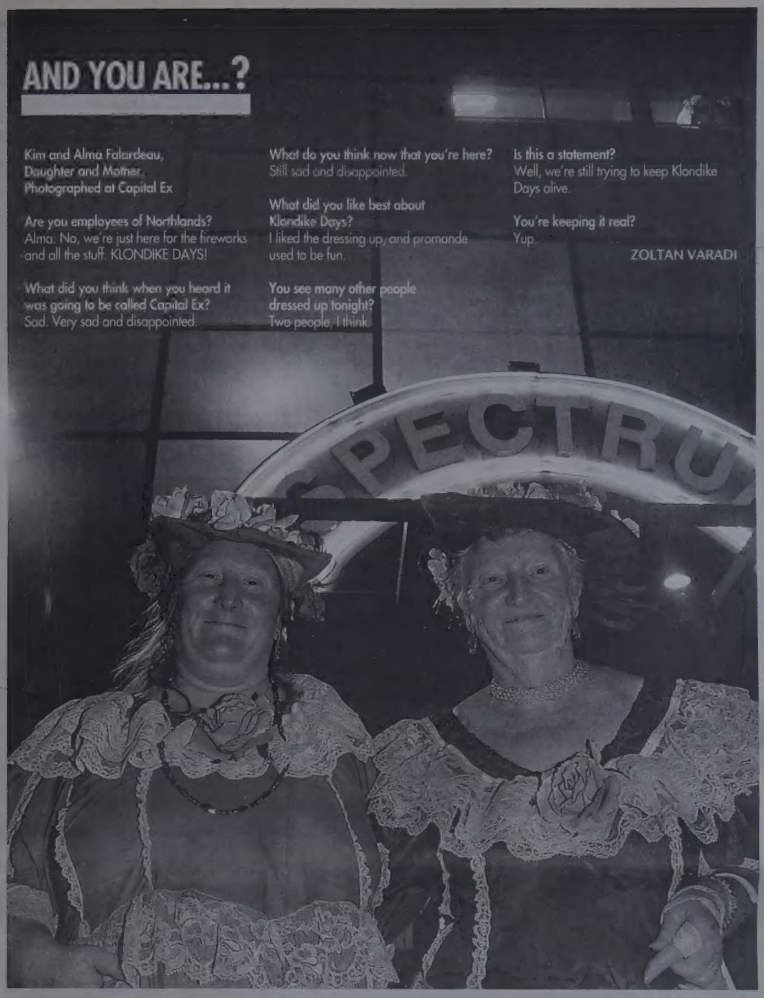
AND YOU ARE...?



Kim and Alma Falardeau,
Daughter and Mother,
Photographed at Capital Ex

Are you employees of Northlands?
Alma: No, we're just here for the fireworks and all the stuff. KLONDIKE DAYS!

What did you think when you heard it was going to be called Capital Ex?
Sad. Very sad and disappointed.

What do you think now that you're here?
Still sad and disappointed.

What did you like best about Klondike Days?
I liked the dressing up, and promande used to be fun.

You see many other people dressed up tonight?
Two people, I think.

Is this a statement?
Well, we're still trying to keep Klondike Days alive.

You're keeping it real?
Yup.

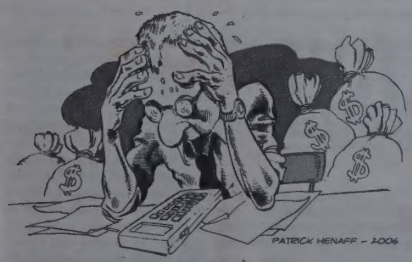
FASTER, FASTER! Team competes to satisfy insatiable tax man in the Fun Tubs Derby in front of City Hall, July 25



NOW WHERE DID I PUT MY WALLET...

YOU WOULDN'T THINK IT'D BE EASY TO LOSE TRACK OF $11.5 million dollars, but then, you probably don't work for the City of Edmonton. Last week, city managers realized that $11.5 million bucks they thought represented 2006 earnings were actually from 2005. Makes you wonder who they've got working the adding machines at City Hall. Well, we all make mistakes, and the extra money brings the city's 2005 budget surplus up to $41.7 million, one of the highest in years. The "found" money will be banked away to cover cost overruns on future city projects.

EPS BUDGET GONE WILD

THE EDMONTON POLICE SERVICE TOOK IT ALL OFF AT THE Police Commission meeting this month, revealing that military-style law enforcement during the playoffs added to $2.2 million in unbudgeted expenditures, and could have a lasting effect on public safety for the remainder of the year, as services are snipped to deal with the deficit.

Ironically, cuts to weekend beat patrols on Whyte were suggested as a move that could save $200,000. The idea comes with a warning that the "current level of staffing only provides minimum control of activity on Whyte Ave." Other ideas include canceling a community safety initiative that will put more cops in crime-plagued areas like 118th Avenue. See a pattern here?

Nowhere does the report mention cuts to AIR-1. Operating expenses for the whirlybird hover around $600,000 per year. If the cops left it on the ground half-time, they could kill two birds with one stone, saving cash and freeing up a couple officers for good old-fashioned beat patrols... How 'bout it, Chief?

GEE MOM, WE SPENT IT ALL ON CANDY AND REBATE CHEQUES

ALBERTA COULD USE SOME MORE FEDERAL MONEY, ACCORDING to Intergovernmental affairs Minister Gary Mar.

Mar, along with Premier Klein, has long opposed the feds' policy of distributing money to the provinces according to their relative wealth, since it means Alberta gets less federal cash per capita than poorer provinces (because, you know, we don't need it).

But at a Premiers conference in St. John's this week, Mar and Klein are lobbying for more federal money for Alberta, to be allocated towards health and education spending.

"We might provide some flexibility in some other areas if other provinces demonstrate flexibility to provide the same per-capita funding to Alberta that everybody else gets," said Mar on Monday, hinting that the provincial government might finally be willing to open its pocketbook to the poorer provinces, but only if we get something in return.

GONE FISHIN'

EVEN RALPH "BEING PREMIER IS NO FUN ONCE YOU'VE stopped drinking" Klein needs a vacation once in a while. So as not to monkey with the B.C. fishing trip he'd penciled in for the Labour Day weekend, Klein changed the summer legislative session's start from Aug. 30 to Aug. 24. But to accommodate the session, he was willing to cancel an official trip to Asia. Given Klein's impending retirement, we just have to ask: is he finally turning into that guy at the office who thinks he can do whatever he wants, now that he's given his two weeks notice?

Poor reception for WiFi

Council has yet to justify municipal wireless plans

"WI... FI..." THE CITY HALL RECEPTIONist sounds out the word slowly, as though it were part of some alien language. Yes, WiFi.

I'm calling to find out what has motivated Coun. Mike Nickel's recent interest in the technology. He wants to see wireless internet access points spread across the downtown core, touching the NAIT campus to the north, and stretching south to the U of A campus.

The proposal wouldn't exactly put Edmonton on the "bleeding edge" of technology. Wireless Internet access (WiFi), has been around for at least five years, but mass installations for public use are still new to the slow-moving public sector.

Paris plans on building 400 free access points in the next year. And the small city of Tempe, Arizona (population 160,000) has built a network of free "hotspots" where laptop-toters can hook up for free. Toronto plans to roll out cheap, citywide access through Toronto Hydro. Nunavut's capital, Iqaluit, is the first Canadian city to roll out a free municipally provided service.

If Edmonton pulls it off, it gets some of the instant "wow" factor associated with being genuinely innovative. But, aside from getting 15 minutes of fame, it's not clear how the service would benefit the city. But that isn't stopping Nickel from forging ahead.

WIRELESS WOES

Most free municipal services are slow or have poor coverage. Tempe has spent nearly two years trying to get their service right. They managed to get running for a zero cash layout, thanks to a contract with a private service provider. Problem is, while the system works fine for city employees, private users are often frustrated by poor indoor signals.

Iqaluit got running under a similar model, but the service is capped at data transmission speeds that won't come close to competing with private offerings.

Toronto is one of only a few cities undertaking a public utility model for the service, offering a large, fast network for a low monthly fee. The plan has already drawn the ire of corporate giants Rogers and Telus, and free WiFi activists (yes, there is such a thing).

Telus and Rogers don't want government competing with private industry, and has been beating the political bushes with dire warnings that the service will cost far more than "cash-strapped" Toronto anticipates. On top of that, they're trying to flog a $25/month network of their own nation-wide "hotspots."

The "Wireless Toronto" activists criticize the city for moving too slowly. They want public wireless now, and they want it free. They have already set about installing free access points around the city. Dufferin Grove park got free WiFi back in May and Yonge-Dundas Square went live at the end of June.

Edmonton already plans an internal roll out that would move information through the air for ambulances, transit stops, and other laptop-toting city employees. But administrators say council should wait until a "successful implementation has emerged that warrants emulation" before moving ahead with any public network. In other words, they want to copy whatever plan doesn't break the bank. So far they haven't seen one.

MONEY TALKS

Nickel isn't happy with the administration's reluctance. He wants to get the built-in business advertising that comes with early adoption. And, he adds, "connectivity is productivity."

At the very least, Nickel says he wants any wireless network to be cost-neutral ("It ain't gonna be free" he assures me). Other cities have achieved that with varied success by setting up the service under a public-private-partnership.

Telus spokesman Jim Johannsson says the company would invite talks with the city to help implement the plan, but he would rather see everyone locked into a contract for the company's high-speed internet over cellular technology (EVDO). Telus has no thunderous criticisms for council yet, because the plan is still in its early stages, and money could be made setting up the service.

The idea that wireless service can actually benefit average Edmontonians is still unproven. Wireless access is already a fact of life at the U of A, so there's little to no benefit in it for students. And subsidized wireless is unlikely to close any income-driven "technology gap." After all, you need to own a laptop to make use of the service.

Nickel isn't shy about his motivations—it's all business baby. Which leads to another question that needs to be answered: if the only benefit is for business people and middle-class road warriors, why should tax dollars pay for it? If the primary beneficiaries of wireless are businesses, maybe we should leave businesses to pay for it.

October, 2005 — Google Inc. makes a pitch to provide "free" WiFi in the San Francisco Bay area. The only cost is a slice of San Francisco's collective consciousness: Google plans to pay off their infrastructure investment by placing geographically targeted ads on users' machines.

November, 2005 — New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin announces a free, high-speed WiFi as part of the city's rebuilding effort. A state law prohibiting free or low-cost high-speed municipal wireless service was suspended because of the "state of emergency" declared after Hurricane Katrina. Bell South, which rolled out a $69.95/month WiFi subscription service one month earlier, retaliates by taking back a building it had donated to the city's battered police force.

April, 2006 — Iqaluit, the capital of Nunavut, launches a single WiFi "hotspot" providing free Internet access to the community's 7,000 residents. A company called Comguard broadcasts from a single eight-story apartment building rooftop. The company hopes to make money by selling e-mail addresses, which are typically included in private subscription plans.

July, 2006 — Paris Mayor Bertrand Delanoe announces the city will install 400 free WiFi access points across the city. Delanoe cites free WiFi as a key competitive factor in attracting international business.

IN BRIEF

Indie media scrap

THE DIRTY HOE IS FEELING LOW.

Calgary-based politics and current affairs magazine Alberta Views declined to run an ad for CJSR Radio's The Dirty Hoe gardening program in their May issue, claiming it was too risqué for the magazine's readership.

The ad features a '50s pinup-style drawing of a woman standing in a garden, wearing nothing but stockings and high heels, and holding a garden hoe. A cleverly placed fence hides her naughty bits.

"Her posture and demeanour seems empowering," says Alex Bolivar, the program's host. "It doesn't seem exploitative; she chose to put on the stockings and heels and work in the garden."

"It was cheeky," says Christine Caskey, Alberta Views' advertising manager. "We can be a little irreverent ourselves, but this was beyond the pale."

The disagreement over the ad eventually led to all of CJSR's ads being pulled from the magazine, which received a complaint in April from a reader about another CJSR ad, which featured a man urinating the station's name into a snowbank.

"I understand they have the right to accept or reject ads, it's just unfortunate that both ad contracts have been dropped," says Bolivar, "and now CJSR has no presence in the magazine, and vice-versa."

CJSR and Alberta Views had planned to run another ad explaining the squabble to readers. It would have consisted of a white square with the text, "Alberta Views rejected the ad that was to run in this space. They thought you'd be offended," and a link to the station's web site. The magazine rejected the new ad as inflammatory.

"It makes sense for CJSR to make it a 'stick it to the man' issue—like we censored them," says Caskey. "But we're a small, politically progressive magazine. We're not the man."

After the ad was rejected, Alberta Views received only a few complaints, all of which, says Caskey, came from people close to CJSR.

"The only phone call we got was someone who said that whoever had forced this decision must be some uptight, middle aged, white Christian male, which is funny because I'm a 24-year-old woman working for a magazine that gets hate-mail from the type of people he described. It just showed how far CJSR was from having a mature opinion about it."

Alberta Views, which won "Magazine of the Year" at last year's Western Magazine Awards, has been publishing since 1998, and specializes in progressive and leftist political and cultural coverage.

SHARE YOUR RIDE

YOU'VE SEEN THAT AL GORE MOVIE, RIGHT? The scary one where he warns us about how we're killing the Earth with our cars? Or maybe you've read that book, The Revenge of Gaia, by environmentalist James Lovelock, wherein he likens the planet's ecosystem to a living being, and a living being who's getting pretty pissed about being treated so shoddily for so long.

Well, what better way to assuage your guilt and do the planet some good than by reducing your car-dependency?

I know, I know, in a sprawled out city like Edmonton, it's impossible to get around effectively on foot or bike, and let's face it, our transit system has a ways to go before it can be called efficient. But if you're going to use a car, you can at least use it less.

That's the premise on which the Carsharing Co-op of Edmonton was founded.

Carsharing has been around in Europe since the '80s, and plenty of North American cities have been getting on board in recent years. The idea is that if you only need a car once in a while, not every day, you pay a membership fee and get added to the co-op's driver list. Then you book a collectively owned car in advance of use (or you can pick it up any time, as long as it's available).

Edmonton's car-sharing co-op only has one vehicle right now, a 1999 Toyota Tercel, which they keep on the U of A campus, but as they add members they'll add cars.

Okay, we live in a highly individualist society, and communal ownership, rather than private ownership, does carry with it a certain stigma (it seems sorta commie). So here's a more selfish reason to join a carsharing group, if you need one: it saves money. You split the cost of the vehicle, the insurance, and the maintenance.

The group also promotes carsharing as an alternative to owning a second car, if you've already got one you're unwilling to part with. According to their web site (http://www.web.net/~cce/), "when a person purchases a vehicle it is financially beneficial for them to use it as much as possible because the fixed costs are quite high (initial purchase price and insurance) while the operating costs are quite low (fuel, oil, and maintenance). This system encourages car owners to drive more because it reduces their cost per kilometre traveled but creates more greenhouse gases."

AutoShare, a joint group of North American carsharing programs, estimates that one shared car typically replaces six individually owned cars. True, you don't get to hop in the car every time you want to head to the corner store, but then, maybe that's for the best, right?

Second time's a charm

Brit-lit whiz kid proves she's here to stay

ALENTEJO BLUE
By Monica Ali
Scribner, 228 pp., $29.95

SINCE MONICA ALI'S 2003 DEBUT novel Brick Lane won her the Man Booker Prize, she's been hailed as one of Britain's new literary whiz-kids. It's no surprise then that her second book, Alentejo Blue, is shaping up to be one of the most heavily scrutinized sophomore novels in recent years.

Any artists' sophomore release tends to be put under this kind of critical microscope, no matter the field, and no matter the artist; but in Ali's case, Alentejo Blue emits an aura of confidence. Ali seems to be saying "I don't care what you thought of Brick Lane, I don't even care about Brick Lane. I care about this book, right now." You may only be as good as the last thing you've done, but this age-old golden rule doesn't seem to get under her skin.

The geographic location of Alentejo Blue could not be more removed from that of her debut novel either. Ali has changed her setting from the Bangladesh community of London's East End to a small, secluded village in southern Portugal, located in the province of Alentejo. The village is Mamarrosa, and the book draws on a cross section of the fictitious people and events that go on there.

We are introduced to many of the village's characters in a chapter-by-chapter format; each chapter is strong enough a narrative, and detached enough from each other, to serve as a story in its own right. It's almost Joycean, as in the case of Dubliners, where a writer can take several seemingly unrelated characters and events and unite them all under the umbrella of the city in which they live.

The whole novel is littered with political commentary—most notably in the case of Vasco, a man who clings to the marriage of his dead American wife because it makes him feel superior to everyone else in the village—and social commentary, where the passing of time in Mamarrosa moves so slow that the writing is purposefully ponderous.

At times, this text-as-a-symbol approach to her narrative works marvelously, and at other times, it becomes what it is meant to be: ponderous, slow, almost still. In that sense, she is successful, since she's really has captured the essence of her village, but it doesn't ease the fact that the book is—at times—difficult to follow. It's easy to get distracted when reading Alentejo Blue, but this is balanced by instances in the book which are gripping and thought-provoking. Ali seems to tread on a line of inconsistency—this book constantly fluctuates between the engaging and the tedious.

Ali seems to tread on a line of inconsistency—she constantly fluctuates between the engaging and the tedious (but more often engaging).

What proves Ali's worth as a writer—aside from her winning the Booker Prize of course—is the fact that the moments in the novel which are thought-provoking and engaging outweigh those that are not. Ali dissects a culture, and she does it poetically, and for that she has to be commended.

Using Joycean techniques like viewpoint shifting and stream of consciousness narrative, Ali manages to truly represent her village as though the reader was possessed of one of the minds of the people who dwell in it. Her never-ending parade of characters, and her attention to detail in the lives of these people, is like some kind of closet Narnia or Neverland, and developed just as meticulously, albeit in more modernist ways.

Ali has come out on top, again. It's fortunate if she's only judged to be as good as the last thing she's done, because Alentejo Blue is a great work. Undoubtedly, in three years, the critics and the reading public will be judging whatever Ali does next by the standard set by this one.

And Ali has proven herself to have the artistic confidence—and credibility—to shrug off criticism, and deliver another novel however she wants it delivered.

RE:READING
JAY SMITH

OF BACON...

IT'S NOT EVERY DAY THAT A BIZARRE intersection of modern marketing and the animal rights sympathies promulgated by children's literature makes the news.

This is the story: NBC reports that E.B. White's 1952 classic, Charlotte's Web, was recently slated for reissue by HarperCollins. The publisher decided that no 21st century edition of the book could do without the verisimilitude of a photograph of a real piglet on the front cover.

The pre-eminently photogenic piglet was discovered on a Tennessee farm. According to the report, Maria Modugno, a vice president with HarperCollins, said, "that little pig was irresistible." That is not a surprising comment—as mother to a ten-month-old, I know that little things are deliberately cute, just 'cuz screaming and poopy diapers are not.

What is surprising is what she went on to say: "The pig leapt off the page."

What? Has she forgotten that this Tennessee piglet—oh, how life imitates art!—was christened "Wilbur" after the Wilbur in the book? Or does she mean that Wilbur the literary pig transmogrified into a real little piglet thanks to HarperCollins' thorough perusal of pig breeders throughout the continental United States?

At any rate, the sentimental New York posse photographing little Wilbur quickly learnt the number one lesson about the emotional attachments to farmyard animals: those are not yer friends, they're yer dinner.

Says Modugno, "This pig is headed for pork chops, which is a little bit horrifying." (SPOILER ALERT: pork chops was the fate reserved for the literary Wilbur, as well, prior to the intervention of one benevolent spider named Charlotte.)

As afore-alluded, the average Tennessee pig farmer wouldn't consider any of these events tragic. John Bately, the pig's owner, however, decided to veer from this eerie tale of life-imitating art, and spare the piglet's life.

"I kinda felt guilt [sic], so I said, 'I'm not going to be the bad old farmer [featured in Charlotte's Web], I'm going to be the good farmer."

Meanwhile, John Bately is, presumably, busy slaughtering other pigs for market.

...AND OF WAR

EVERY NOW AND THEN SOMEONE WILL PICK up on our "job" (as an extremely part-time books reviewer) during a conversational lull and proceed to defer to our apparent expertise in contemporary literature. As flattering as it is to be in a position to dictate other people's reading habits, great power, as Spiderman says, brings great responsibility. Linking personal interests with the range of recently published literature isn't always a piece of cake.

If any one of you, dear readers, were to ask us that question today, however, our answer would be clear: read Robert Fisk's The Great War for Civilisation: The Conquest of the Middle East. We've been ploughing through it for several months (it's almost 1500 pages long), but events in the past week or so make this an extremely relevant read (another SEE reviewer snagged the freebie copy, so we even spent the money on this one.)

It's popularly considered to be the book to read if you want to purport to know anything about Middle East, so even if you don't agree with Fisk there's a lot to learn here. His stunningly literary style—effortlessly flowing from his relationship with his father, to distant history, to the latest war in Iraq—smoothes over any differences of opinion.

Meanwhile, Democracy Now! (www.democracynow.org) is keeping up-to-date on the crisis; their coverage includes an interview with Noam Chomsky last week.

IN BRIEF

DE NIRO'S GAME
by Rawi Hage
House of Anansi Press, 277 pages, $29.95.

RAWI HAGE IS A WRITER AND VISUAL artist from Montreal, but he was born in Beirut and lived through nine years of the Lebanese civil war. He draws on his experiences of the war-ravaged country in De Niro's Game, his mesmerising first novel (the title refers to the scene in The Deer Hunter where Robert De Niro plays Russian roulette). Hage's narrative revolves around Bassam and George, two young men who have been friends since childhood, and how they negotiate the ubiquitous corruption and violence in Beirut. Bassam in particularly is an exception amidst contemporary protagonists in that he's a narrator with dubious moral judgment. In all, it's a fascinating must-read profile of war's psychological effects, propelled by Hage's phenomenal, poetic, style.

Bait and switch leaves our reviewer unsated

PHO HOA
9719-9723 106 Ave., ★★★☆☆

DESPITE MY BEST EFFORTS, A GOOD bowl of Pho (pronounced… well, I'll get to that in a bit) has eluded me ever since I moved to Edmonton. So, I do what I can to try new Vietnamese places whenever possible. A week without Pho is like a year without sunshine in a lot of respects. And I was out poking around the other day, I came across a Vietnamese noodle house that I hadn't noticed before, Pho Hoa.

Now, Pho is a traditional Vietnamese broth style soup that comes with rice noodles, meat or meat items (tendons, tripe, fatty crunchy flank), vegetables, onions, and depending on which area of the country you're in, possibly herbs.

Now here's the thing about Pho: I've heard people from various ethnic backgrounds (including Vietnamese) pronounce it like the "fu" in a certain word I shall not print, or "fa" or even "fo". I've always stuck with the pronunciation of "fu" rhyming with "hue": the dish is a Vietnamese interpretation of the classic French dish Pot-au-Feu (the end of which doesn't rhyme with "hue," but... erm... has almost the same letters).

To make Pot-au-Feu isn't all that difficult. You start by slowly cooking a large beef bone (preferably a knuckle—tendons still attached) with veggies and herbs in water to extract the nutrients and flavour to make a stock.

Once you have a suitable stock established (hours later), a large piece of meat is added, such as flank or brisket—something tough that needs to be slowly cooked in order to keep it tender. When the meat is almost done, it's removed and set aside while the broth is strained through cheesecloth to remove impurities such as little leftover bits of tendon, etc. The liquid is then cooled overnight so the fat congeals on the surface and can be easily scraped away.

The next day, some of the stock is reheated, and vegetables are added to it. Once they're nearly done, slices of the meat go back into the both to warm, and the whole thing is served together with some fresh herbs.

After years of colonization by the French, some of the Vietnamese cooking traditions became intermingled with the French, Pot-au-Feu being one such example. The broth is made in a similar fashion by slowly cooking big knuckle bones and dodgy cuts of meat in water. The broth is then poured over rice noodles, and the meat, usually cooked to medium or medium rare, is added back in thin strips to finish cooking in the soup so that it isn't overdone by the time it's served. The little bits of tendons and such are also added back into the broth (waste-not want-not sort of thing...) and then sliced green and white onions are strewn over top.

The steaming bowl of noodle soup with meat is typically served in south Vietnam with another bowl of raw bean sprouts, limes, sliced hot chilies, fresh cilantro sprigs, mint leaves and an Asian style basil (Thai basil works well). To eat the soup, you plop a new batch of fresh veggies into your bowl with every bite or two, so that they remain fresh and crisp with every bite.

When done properly, you simply can't beat a good Pho. The soft noodles and clear broth scented with fresh lime and herbs are an absolute delight. Add to that the crisp bite of bean sprouts and raw hot chilies... I swear to you... my mouth is watering while I write this.

My mouth watered as well as I waited in the vinyl booth for the server to bring my Pho Chin Nam (noodle soup with brisket and flank—$6). She set it down in front of me and I grabbed some chopsticks while I waited for her to return with the other bowl of veggies. I sat quite still with my chopsticks at my side as she passed again and again. No veggies.

DAVID YOUNG

I could have cried. My veggies never arrived despite the fact that the company website (I later found out it's a chain) says, "each bowl of soup is accompanied with fresh coriander leaves, bean sprouts, hot peppers, lemon wedges... to give the customers a complete, nutritious and well-balanced meal." A quick scan of the room seemed to indicate that no one else got the accompanying veggie bowl either.

I sat dejectedly poking my chopsticks into my greasy bowl of noodle and meat soup. Adding insult to injury, the broth wasn't that clear and the strips of beef were overcooked. In fact, it was more like chipped beef, and I don't know even what chipped beef is, but I'm pretty sure it's prison food.

The taste was alright, though I added heaps of hoisin and Sriracha hot sauce, which overpowered the thing. It was an acceptable bowl of soup, I guess. It just didn't live up to the promise of Pho.

If a week without Pho is like a year without sunshine, then thinking you'll have Pho but being denied it is... well, it's just really sad, isn't it? Alas, good Pho (like its French counterpart) seems to be a bit of a plat mythique for me in Edmonton. It certainly is proving to be a myth.

Demi-Canadians

Harper's words a chilly affront to war dead

CRAIG ELLIOT
COMMENT

IN A WAY, THIS SHOULDN'T HAVE come as a surprise. Prime Minister Stephen Harper is a right wing ideologue and a cold fish. He's run two elections on it now, not ever making much of an attempt to hide either point. Why would he? How could he?

"Steve" (as me and Gee Dubya like to call him) got a free ride on the foreign affairs tip last election, as did the other party leaders, because the topic of Things That Happen Outside Canada but Which Affect Canadians never seemed to come up. Considering the electoral circumstances at the time, it's a good bet that Canadians would have cut Harper lots of slack on whatever he said, no matter how it happened to come out.

Geez, Stevie... not one pointed remark about the ugliness, or the consequences, of fighting your enemies by proxy?

They knew he was Right, they knew he was cold, and they knew he was the man for them.

And so, again, who can seriously claim the right to be surprised by Harper's assessment of the situation after Hezbollah killed eight and kidnapped two Israeli soldiers in a cross-border raid from Lebanon, and Israel responded with a ferocious air assault on Lebanon's airports, roads, bridges, neighbourhoods, and people?

"Israel has the right to defend itself," the PM put it so succinctly. Brrrrrrrr. Don't look at me, I didn't vote for the guy. I mean, yeah, of course they have the right to defend themselves, and in a sporting sense, a strong offence is quite often considered to be the best defence, but then again, the bombing of bridges and airports, civilian infrastructure, and civilians isn't sport. At least it wasn't the last time I checked the Geneva Conventions.

But that's not all Steve had to say. Not long after, he added, "I think Israel's response under the circumstances has been measured." Perhaps the Prime Minister meant to say Israel's response could be measured, most appropriately, by a killing ratio of 10 to one, Lebanese civilians to IDF personnel, but if he did, he forgot to correct himself.

Geez, Stevie, not even a little smidgey-smidge of lip service paid to dead, maimed and/or orphaned children? Not one pointed remark about the ugliness, or the consequences, of fighting your enemies by proxy, which could apply to either side in this interminable conflict? And not so much as a grunt of sympathy as a family man, a father who drops his son off at school each day with a hardy handshake, for the Al-Akhrass family, Canadians on holiday in Lebanon with no connections to terrorism, who were wiped out by a "wayward" Israeli bomb? No wonder those other 30 thousand Lebanese Canadians were in such a hurry to come back to Canada; it's where they left their parkas, you cold sonofagun!

I would like to have seen a poll after those remarks, just a little approval rating thing, to see what Canadians thought of Stephen Harper's sense of moral clarity. Or, if not that, then his sense of loyalty, because man, even George W Bush pretends to give a shit about his own countrymen, and you can be sure he'd have something to say to the Israeli authorities if the Al-Akhrass family were Americans. But as for Stephen Harper, not a word, prompting the Canadian Observer blog to remark, "We leave you with a riddle: If two Israeli soldiers are worth so much time and trouble by the Israeli state, how much trouble and time is the Canadian state willing to make for the killing of... its citizens?" If I could say it better than that, I would.

Contrast Harper's words with those of the first Israeli conscientious objector of the conflict, reserve staff sergeant Itzik Shabbat, and you've got one heckuva debate on what constitutes a principled stand in this world. According to Israel's Ha'aretz newspaper, Shabbat refused to comply with an emergency order to report for reserve duty in the Israeli territories in order to free up forces from the standing army for the war on Lebanon.

Anticipating (and receiving) a thorough excoriation from the Israeli mainstream, he said, "In my opinion, only this type of opposition that I've chosen will put an end to the madness that is going on now and will shatter the false feeling that the entire home front supports this unnecessary war that is based on deceptive considerations. Someone has to be the first the break the silence and it will be me."

Well, we all knew it wasn't going to be Stephen Harper.

Push comes to shove it

Oh Canada: suck it up, pay your bills

ON THE LAST DAY OF MY "INDIAN Wars," I walked away from a fight I felt I could no longer win with the weapons, at that time, I was willing to use.

I can trace the start of my war back to when I was 11 years old and the prettiest girl I had ever seen, my first love, killed herself. Our teacher read us a copy of her suicide note. He looked up from reading her letter when she read the words, "I'm sorry Kou-Kum." The teacher asked if anyone knew what "Kou-Kum" meant. I raised my hand and said, "Grandmother."

I began to see that little girl, and others like her (native children kill themselves at ten times the national average), as the canaries in the coal mine.

Just as the songbirds warned miners of danger when their singing stopped, I saw the deaths of those children as a warning to all of us that Canadian society was in danger.

My mixed ancestry made me a Metis and proud of it. For a long time I considered myself a modern-day warrior, and I thought the modern warrior's weapons should be words: written, spoken, and sung.

I wrote a column for newspapers, I spoke at rallies and schools, and I wrote songs about native issues and sang them with a native group traveling across Canada. I was naive back then, idealistic, and in many ways a fool. I honestly, laughably, believed if Canadians were just educated about First Nations issues they would force their politicians to change policies that had devastated aboriginals and their communities. I was sure the war would be over soon. I honestly believed the deaths of so many children would not be in vain.

But days became months at the snap of a finger and months became years just as fast. I looked backed at 10 years of my life and had to ask myself what I had accomplished.

Canada has steadfastly become a nation without honour, and we've become comfortable raising our children based on that dishonour

By then I had encountered hundreds, maybe thousands, of Canadians who spoke about Canadian history as if John Wayne were our founding father. "We beat those Indians fair and square" is a sentence I had heard so many times that my initial laughter turned to true fear.

There were so many Canadians that just couldn't seem to grasp that their country was not the United States. I would explain repeatedly that in Canada treaties were signed, agreements that stated that this is native land, but in exchange for certain considerations other people (European settlers) were also allowed to live here. I would explain that this is the foundation of Canada, not the Indian Wars like the Little Bighorn south of the border.

When I laid down my pen, ending my old way of fighting for native rights, I was overwhelmed by frustration. Disappointed and angry, I had started to see the answer in armed revolution, and I know I was far from the only one with those thoughts.

Was I a fool to once believe in Canadians so completely? Part of my personal dilemma, of course, is my mixed ancestry. Symbolically, it came down to sparing my mother and shooting my father, a stand I was not prepared to take.

PAYING THE BILLS

I was in a bar on that last day of my Indian Wars when I saw him.

It wasn't so much him as the cliché of him. He was a clean-cut university student. I was at the next table. He was telling his buddies how "horny" he was, "Let's get some squaws and fuck their asses off." I had him by the throat before I knew what came over me.

I looked into his huge what-did-I-do-wrong eyes and I knew I wanted to kill him. I choked until I was pulled away. I was sick of it. I was sick of Canadians.

The next day, I took a long walk in an attempt find some sort of solace. I accepted my concept of a modern warrior had been a failure. I started writing myself a note; maybe it was a suicide note. Instead it became the poem and, in a sense, my letter of resignation.

It has always seemed so simple to me. Pay your bills, Canada. Be honourable, and everything will resolve itself. Honour the treaties: some of that is land and some of that is money. Pay that bill! Like reparation after World War II, Canada owes the Aboriginal community reparations for the horror of the residential school system. Pay that bill!

Canada imposes two forms of rule on its citizens. One is in the form of democracy. The other is in the form of a dictatorship called the Department of Indian Affairs. Dictatorships don't work. Abolish it!

THE PAST IS THE FUTURE

But now we have Steven Harper. His lack of respect and understanding of native people makes me think of that university student, except this time I am far more afraid than I am angry. I am afraid he and his policies may well be the final straw.

When his first budget came down, the die was cast. Promises made by the previous governments, and supported by the Conservatives during election season, were broken, like so many promises of the past.

There would be no resolution of longstanding issues like the promised relocation of the Kashechewan community and the implementation of the Kelowna accord. No money in the budget, despite the huge surplus.

How can the Canadian society sleep at night when their most important bill remains unpaid?

Will there be a native revolution in Canada? You tell me. If you lived in a country where your life expectancy was far below the national average, would you fight?

If you were the young native man who had to cut his sister down from the rafter she has hung herself from, would you fight?

Or if you were the young generation who have watched their parents fight this same battle for rights, and their grandparents before them, and yet still live in third world conditions here in Canada, "our home and native land."

As for me personally, I really don't know. If it comes to war, will I fight? I guess I'll have to burn that bridge when I come to it. I love Canada. It is my home and I don't know that I have choice in that love.

But Canada has steadfastly become a nation without honour and we have become comfortable raising our children based on that dishonour. We will all pay the price for that, one way or another, sooner or later.

Brit art stars riff on the self at AGA

BODY: NEW ART FROM THE U.K.
Through Aug 27, Art Gallery of Alberta (2 Sir Winston Churchill Square). Info: 422-6223, www.edmontonartgallery.com

AN AMBIGUOUS, TOUGH-ASS ANDROGynous Sarah Lucas self-portrait may have been chosen to represent BODY: New Art From the U.K. in the accompanying materials, but a Tracy Emin piece is the real key to the show.

Emin is an international art star and a celebrity in her native U.K., revered and reviled by critical and general English press and the public. Precocious, contradictory, sharp, and a total emotional shipwreck with a masochistic compulsion to reveal too much, Emin is an almost emblematic member of a wee knot of artists with a weird fame that they alternately reject furiously and pursue ardently. The group's push-and-pull routine extends to the art world, towards which they have a posture of contempt but a position of submission.

In the huge photo-print "I've Got It All," a spread-legged Emin sits, scooping coins and bills to shower her crotch in fiscal bounty. Her gaze is firmly fixed, one presumes, on her assets, but it could be that she's entranced by her navel.

The preening narcissism of the 1980s gave way to the intense solipsism of the 1990s, premiere practitioners of which were young, hot, media savvy Brits who claimed to be either confronting social attitudes or unable to give a shit about them. What absorbed them the most was themselves, whether in and of themselves or in relation to a larger cultural landscape.

BODY, a touring show organized by the Vancouver Art Gallery and British Council, pulls together what Canadian curator Bruce Greenville identifies as two streams of artists, both using physical selves as springboards for their work, one externally focused and the other internally obsessed. The show is an excellent representation of relevant, evocative and provocative artists and a chance to look at art from people who are unquestionably important (emphasis on the capital "I") in the international art community.

Like actual bodies, the works have surfaces that obscure inner processes. Many pieces come from intimidating practices, those dependent on the artist's statement as Rosetta stone: you look at the art, you read the statement, you renegotiate your first read on the art from the information on the statement and react to it again.

Cornelia Parker's work is the best example of this process. A plexiglass box holds a boy doll dressed in a cap-blazer-trouser uniform, sliced neatly in half at the torso, mouth agape. What you don't get until you read the label of "Shared Fate (Oliver)" is that, A) the doll is Oliver, as in Twist, and B) it was guillotined by the same contraption that severed Marie Antoinette's head. She repeats the trick in two photos that show a feather from a pillow on Freud's couch and a detail his chair. The photos are beautiful, but it's impossible to discern what they are without the prompting of the artist.

This work is about privilege. Not just anyone has access to gruesome historically pivotal artifacts and possessions of dead scientific luminaries. The access and the knowledge are privileges, and if the artist doesn't choose to bestow upon us the "reality" of what we are looking at, it remains opaque.

What's troubling is that so much of the work isn't about expanding our field of vision—say, by giving the viewer a fresh perspective on a wider culture—but by narrowing it. In cases likes Emin's, we are invited to look upon her as a clever parody of want, when it buries genuine want. Shouldn't we be discussing actual desire, instead of mock desire?

While it could be argued that a celebration of surface and empty bellicosity—such as in Fiona Banner's literary porno screen-printed onto aluminum, which has a James Deanish "What are you rebelling against?" "What have you got?" attitude about it—is actually commenting on society, shouldn't we want our Big Art to work a little harder, see a little deeper, be a little riper? How can we excoriate entertainment for "dumbing down" culture when our cultural watchdogs have become dumb—not just vapid, but also mute?

No holds barred for Fringe 25

THE NAME'S STRICKER, PILGRIM, MIKI Stricker. A bundle of sass 'n spunk, she's the head cowpoke at this here Edmonton International Fringe Festival, the 25th of its kind. Armed with a walkie-talkie instead of the requisite six-shooter, this dame will wrangle 161 productions from companies representing eight countries.

"The total includes 13 outdoor shows, so you do the math!," she chuckles when asked about the amount of theatre to be had down on the range

148 productions make for a steaming passle of theatre that will challenge even the most die-hard Fringer. However, says Striker, behind the hoedown, Hi Yo Fringe—Away! remains the premiere destination for adventurous artists. "We have the highest return to artists of any fringe in Canada and the highest average audience numbers."

Last year the average audience size was 76, with the average return to artists sitting at "$4,200 and change." And with the application fee sitting below that of Vancouver or Toronto, Edmonton is good value Stricker is blunt about the chances of fame and fortune though. "No one is going to get rich working at the Fringe. With any luck, you'll break even and have enough left over to eat for the month."

> "I'm pretty sure that when Brian Paisley came up with the idea 25 years ago, he didn't expect it would explode."
> MIKI STRICKER

So would culling the herd make things a wee bit more profitable? No.

"My first year here, we did cut back on the number of applicants, eliminated the 13th venue and limited the number of BYOV's (Bring Your Own Venues). It didn't really make any difference to the overall numbers to artists." Last year saw the restoration of the 13th venue, and a relaxation on the rules surrounding BYOV's. 2006 will see the usual 13, but with multiple companies producing out of them.

Business aside, the festival is the big party of the season, and Stricker says the event will pony up in a big way. "It's our 25th anniversary, and we're very excited about that, we're going to have special commemorative events around it."

One such undertaking is sure to delight the nostalgia hounds. "We'll have a retrospective [in the Arts Barns Gallery] of past fringes. Shadow boxes and strange memorabilia of shows over the past 25 years." Also included is a children's art show.

The festival will also be celebrated in film. "Panacea Productions will [present] The Fringe: Acting Up, a documentary that's been filmed at the last couple of Fringe festivals," Stricker says. "There will be two screenings nightly."

Fringers can also celebrate the addition of a new and cool (temperature wise) 103 seat venue—the old Telephone Historical Museum beside Acacia Hall. Planet Ze with its bar, air conditioning, and chandelier remains. Entertainment is planned from three to five daily in the Beer Tent behind the Arts Barns, hosted by the Amber Borotsik. Expect to see previews of nearly every show onsite.

Fringing is easier this year, with the Master Schedule online and the Tickets Only Available at the Door (TOAD) Board listing availabilities for the entire festival instead of daily. The Front of House volunteers will be more visible as they sell tickets from beneath sheltering white tents at each venue, and the audience will be able to post reviews and star ratings online at www.fringetheatreadventures.ca

Tweaking and changes keep the festival fresh each year, according to Stricker. "The Festival is going to continue to evolve. I'm pretty sure that when Brian Paisley came up with the idea 25 years ago, he didn't expect it would explode into the controlled chaos it is or the sheer size or magnitude. Although, at its core, the festival is always the same. Around those base principles, the sky's the limit for us."

Silver Fringe mines theatrical Gold

FRINGE ANNIVERSARY SHOWCASE
Jul 27-30, TransAlta Arts Barns (10330-84 Ave). Tickets: $18, $15 Students/Seniors. Fringe Box Office (lobby of the TransAlta Arts Barns, 409-1910.

MIKI STRICKER IS A GLUTTON FOR punishment. In addition to wrangling "Hi Yo Fringe, Awaaaay!, she's also the producer of the 25th Anniversary Fringe Showcase. The idea germinated about a year ago, when the FTA team brainstormed special events to mark North America's original Fringe Festival's quarter-century. An "alumni venue" at the festival was dismissed as problematic, but the idea lingered and transmogrified into a showcase of past works.

Stricker says the importance of the Fringe has lain in its ability to "germinate ideas." Each of the plays selected for the showcase, she says, has had a life outside the festival, or is the creation of an artist who's left an imprint on Edmonton's artistic life. "Ken Brown's Life After Hockey [July 27, 6.45 pm, July 29, 9.15 pm] is the first certifiable 'Fringe hit.' It played all over Canada and internationally." A quintessentially Canadian story, it enthralled not only audiences in "every town big enough to have a theatre," but also the gods of the ice. Wayne Gretzky, Maurice Richard, Glenn Sather, and Gordie Howe have all embraced it wholeheartedly—Gretzky loving it so much he agreed to be recorded as the Voice of the God of Hockey.

Success aside, avers Stricker, it's Brown's impact as a teacher that the showcase salutes. "At Grant MacEwan, he's influenced a generation of artists, it's immense. Sheldon Elter, Jeremy Baumang, Chris Craddock are a very few of the names that spring to mind. If you include his company theatREPUBLIC, it's huge."

Going back to the very beginning of the festival, she says a play by Stewart Lemoine was a necessity and one by David Belke vitally important "Stewart Lemoine is the godfather of the Fringe. He's been such huge influence, as has David Belke. We couldn't do a showcase without David and Stewart."

Lemoine's Pith! [July 30, 2 & 6:15 pm] played the 1997 Fringe, winning two Sterling Awards. It was revived and sent to the New York City Fringe where it garnered Lemoine the FringeNYC Award for Outstanding Playwriting. It returns to New York later this summer as part of the festival's 10th anniversary celebrations.

All Expenses Paid [July 27 & 28 9 pm] is David Belke's favourite play and one of his most successful. A "comic tale of discovery and disillusionment, with a little Disney on the side," the show charmed Edmonton Fringe audiences in 2000, and this year, travelled down to the Orlando Fringe to acclaim.

Finally, says Stricker, is the show that "redefined what is possible at the Fringe. The Black Rider Friday, July 28, 6:00 – 7:40 pm
Saturday, July 29, 6:15 – 7:55 pm
Sunday, July 30, 9:00 – 10:40 pm
pushed artistic boundaries mot only in 'Fringe Theatre', but also Theatre in general."

The production is the classic story of a kid wanting to put on a show. Michael Scholar Jr fell in love with the Tom Waits recording of the music, and pestered him for the rights to mount the show. Request granted, the English World Premiere of the show was at the 1998 festival. Remounted and re-imagined, by Ron Jenkins, for the New York City Fringe in 1999, the show became the highest-selling show in that festival's history and has gone on to win numerous awards playing mainstage seasons across Canada and theatre festivals including Magnetic North.

Disparate and wonderful, Sticker fondly says the shows chosen are "Wonderful representatives of all the work at the festival over the years. We love all our children equally, so the hardest part was choosing only four."

New company strikes a Poe

EBONY
A Theatrical Adaptation of Edgar Allan Poe's "Black Cat" and "Masque of the Red Death," Adapted from the writings of Edgar Allan Poe by April Killins, Nicholas Mather, and Daniel Anderson, Pounding Nails Productions, Starring Andrew Plait, Adrian Glass, Christina Hardie and Nicholas Mather, Jul 28 – Aug 6 (no shows Jul 31/Aug 1), 8pm The Red Strap Art Market (10305 - 97th St), Tickets: $10

POUNDING NAILS PRODUCTIONS artistic director Daniel Anderson has no problem with the occasional artistic curve ball.

For example, the premiere production of Ebony—his company's adaptation of "The Masque of the Red Death" and "The Black Cat." two stories by famed early 19th Century writer Edgar Allan Poe—came about as a bit of happy coincidence after plans for a Samuel Beckett program/festival proved unfeasible.

Anderson, who had not read Poe growing up, came across a collection of his short stories and—totally taken by their self-contained and complex nature— reckoned they would be for his fledgling company. Pounding Nails is a collaboration-oriented company comprised of recent grads and alumni from the Grant MacEwan Theatre program gathering to mount theatre with an experimental edge.

"You can say I'm totally anti-MTV and I'm not a big fan of the trend in theatre to barrage the audience. I'm more Philip Glass or Beckett than the sugar and fluff you see in new plays or movies and found myself attracted to that aspect of Poe," says Anderson.

"The action in Poe is so very tight and his stories unfold in such a small little world," he says, underlining his company's take on the master of suspense will be fresh and contemporary.

"We're avoiding cliche and promise there will be no ravens or beating hearts in this show."

Anderson is not alone in his fondness for Poe. A long mythologized poet and short-story writer, Poe's reputation continues to grow even in a 21st Century literary context. Best known for his dreamlike and macabre authorial leanings, the famous American author is seen by some theory-driven academics as a proto-modernist whose work straddles the sublime and the grotesque, the fantastic and the prosaic in a highly self-referential manner.

"What I like about Poe is that it is as much what is not said as what is said. Also, you're never quite sure in Poe what is or is not actually taking place. The whole of 'The Masque of the Red Death' could very well take place in Prince Prospero's imagination."

> "I'm totally anti-MTV and I'm not a big fan of the trend to barrage the audience."
> DANIEL ANDERSON

Further underlining the already decentered take on reality Poe exhibits in his tales, Anderson and company are presenting "Black Cat" as a surreal play-within-a-play worthy of "Red Death's" highly dramatic Prospero.

Befitting both the horrific themes in Poe's writing and his company's experimental bent, Anderson and company are eschewing the oft-programmed second floor of the Red Strap Market Building for the cavernous basement.

"I want audiences to question the idea of what a theatrical space is and what they should be or should not be looking at. I booked the basement space as quickly as I could."

Where: Jasper and 112th
Wearing: My Mom thinks these pants are unprofessional, but I disagree. They were 70 bucks and they came with the belt. The blazer is Rip Curl. I like it because it is fun and good for the office. The sandals I bought at a Gravity Pope shoe sale after I made sure that I had bought a pair of good "everyday" shoes. The tank top is from one of those stores on Whyte Ave on 107th near the Varscona. Underneath the tank is a bikini top from Roxy. I wear it so I don't show too much boob. The necklace was a birthday present from my friends when I lived in Honduras, It's a Mariposa (Spanish for butterfly). The earrings are from Honduras as well. I bought them thinking I was helping the local economy. As it turns out they were made in China. The bracelet is also a gift. My friend brought it back for me from Thailand. I bought the ring at the Vancouver International Airport. I like to think of it as a gift as well... from the government. The purse is from the Women's Shelter in Fairview, Alberta, where I grew-up.

SHOUT OUT OUT OUT OUT CD RELEASE
W/ Dietzche V & The Abominable Snowman, Fri - Sat, Jul 28 - 29, Starlite Room (10030-102 St.), Info: 428-7827 or www.starliteroom.ca, $15

"IT'S NICE TO FINALLY HAVE AN album," remarks Shout Out Out Out Out's Nik 7. "The only way we had to gauge reaction was [playing] 'live'—this kind of spectacle."

And what a spectacle: two monster drummers and four other fellas switching off between basses, analog synths, and other noisemaking gizmos, both electrical (the space age drum pad thingy that goes "pty-ooo!" when you whack it) and rudimentary (percussion that could have been thieved from a kindergarten).

Anchored by the complex and powerful live rhythms of Snarf and Gravy, the rest of the dudes go berserk in near-iconic fashion, sort of like when the Peanuts crew breaks into dance.

There's Jaycie, jumping vertically up and down, fist in the air. Jack Wolfskin's wobbly shuffle and his mile-wide grin that nearly splits his face every time he ventures a look at the crowd. Stage veteran Whitey's rock stance and bob-and-weave as he shows his instruments who the boss is.

Then there are the handclaps. Always the handclaps—an invitation and a dare. ("Wanna have fun? We know you wanna have fun. Come on, let's have some fun," wheedle the handclaps. "Clap, clap, clap." And before you know it, your hand is sorer than that of a dominatrix at a BDSM convention.)

Between stints on the vocoder, Nik unleashes relentless patter urging the crowd to free their collective asses and whatever other body parts happen to be able to lure their minds into giving in to the undeniable, orgiastic frenzy that always marks an SO4 gig.

It's exhilarating. It's moving. It's dance music.

DNCRS WLCM

To equate dance music with vapidity is clearly wrongheaded. Bowie did dance music. The Mountain Goats acknowledge dance music in song. Odds are that, at all times, somewhere on the planet—probably Germany—a smart, funny person is dancing.

"Deep down, people at shows want to have fun," Whitey says. "The floodgates open. The crowds, people get swept up in the whole thing, and they go a little bananas."

"Rhythm is a cancer," adds Nik.

He would say that. The strangest thing about SO4's debut full-length, Not Saying/Just Saying—other than the fact that you're listening in your home or car or iPod earbuds instead of at a club, surrounded by a writhing mass of humanity—is that the vocoder-soaked lyrics are intelligible, on the same footing with the beat and electro elements.

Nik writes the majority of the lyrics, which take on everything from consumer and student debt being a bummer, to your mind bumming you out when you're home alone, to haters being bummers.

"I guess there's a theme," shrugs Nik. "More like a tone. It's not like all the songs are about the same thing, but they are bummer songs juxtaposed with happy music."

"It's not happy, but it's not a 'breaking up with girlfriend' song. "That's been done to death," adds Gravy.

"Dance woo-woo lyrics are obviously not interesting," Whitey interjects. "A lot of song titles are tongue in cheek..." ("Chicken Soup for the Fuck You," for example).

"But we don't want this to be a silly band," Nik concludes. "Fun, but never a joke. We take this shit seriously."

RHYTHM METHODS

Rockers playing dance music punctuated with intelligence, animated by passion, and underpinned by mordant wit, SO4 also marry a strong Puritan work ethic with a Bacchanalian spirit.

It takes a village to raise a ruckus. Despite packing rooms since the get-go, SO$ have found that their unprecedented good fortune in terms of high-profile gigs hasn't necessarily led to a corollary increase in their monetary fortunes.

"It's just about impossible for us to make money," Gravy states.

"We do well, but overhead is ridiculous: tons of gear, two vans, lots of people [management, sound guy, etc.]," Nik agrees. "Make no mistake—the people working for us, we pay them. And it's worth it."

They believe that there's no way the band could have achieved their success without their small army of helper elves.

Whitey points out, "You always search for it, with every band. But we stumbled into it with this one."

"Just bracing ourselves for the backlash," Nik jokes. "But right from the start people 'got it.' It's the craziest feeling, to play in a band people really like, dance, and have fun.

"We're glad all these people are here, but where are they coming from?" he asks. "And we think, 'Wow, THIS is how it happens.' Rock on—let's have a dance party." Pause. "And we have records on sale at the back."

Secret identities: Nik Kozub = Nik 7, Jason Troock = Jaycie Jayce, Lyle Bell = Whitey, Gravy = Gravy, Will Zimmerman = Jack Wolfskin, Clint Frazier = Snarf

For gear nerds—About a quarter of a football field's worth: Sequential Pro-One, Roland TR-808, Realistic MG-1, Korg ESX 1, Oberheim Matrix 1000, Roland SVC-350, Korg VC-10, Electrix Warp Factory, Electrix Filter Queen, Korg EX800, Korg Mono/Poly, Korg Poly 6, Korg Poly 61, Yamaha DX-7, Oberheim OBX-A, Yamaha PSS-280, Yamaha CS-5, Korg MS-10, Roland MC-505, MicroKorg x 2, TechStar 2100, Moogger Fooger Low Pass, ProCo Rat, Dr. Scientist Sunny Day Delay, Dr. Scientist Frazz Dazzler, Electro Harmonix Bass Synth, Burns Bison, Precision Bass x 3, Jazz Bass, '68 SG Bass, GK800 Bass Head x 3, Ampeg 6x10, Marshall 4x12, Traynor YBA3, David Eden Cab, Fender 4x10, Vistalite Drum Kit x 2, Cowbell x 3.

Album art: Chad "freaking-amazing" VanGaalen.

The world according to Snarf: "In this band the beat is the main thing. Screw it up, and it's the biggest disaster. If one of the keyboards goes, hey, there are nine others."

Average age: 27.2

Seventh member: Live sound guy John Rubuliak. "The band is one whole rhythm section. Roll into a venue we've never played with bass amps, vocoder, all this shit and they don't know how to deal with it. He's essential." (Nik)

The role of management: "Keeping us seven dudes under control." (Nik)

The legend: At an early roller rink gig, SO4's gear blew the power. The boys kept clapping—and so did the crowd—until the power came back on, and they went right on playing.

The other bands: 28 and counting. Current gigs include Whitey Houston, Down North, Cordoba, Shuyler Jansen's Hobotron, and the Wet Secrets.

On the album: "The approach was to find a balance between records we love and representing what we do in a live setting and how we want it to come across and the sound in our heads." (Nik)

But can you fuck to it? "Too annoyingly hypnotic to be a make out record." (Nik)

MEMORIAL AT TRACK

RAE SPOON'S MUSIC HAS THE TWANG OF country, the insight of great folk, and the kind of delivery that draws the listener in. His lyrics have a universal appeal and hit on truth and reality, with a touch of humour.

"Audiences seem to go for it just about everywhere," says Spoon, on the line from Calgary in the midst of a 15-date, 28-day tour of Western Canada that includes a couple of folk festivals and the Sidetrack Café. "I was well received in England, even though they don't even know what a grain elevator or an SUV are. In Australia, they're familiar with Corb Lund and I rode that into a few festivals, played banjo, and was probably a bit of a novelty."

It's been a wild ride for Spoon over the past five years. Since emerging on the Canadian roots scene in 2001, the young Albertan has played folk festivals across the country and toured Europe and Australia. In 2004, Spoon was awarded CBC's "Galaxie Rising Star Award for best New Artist" and Penguin Eggs magazine's hardware as "Favourite New Discovery."

Spoon also found time to produce, record, and release a pair of discs, 2003's Throw Some Dirt On Me, and 2005's follow up, Your Trailer Door. Both were distributed through his own indie label until Festival Distribution, knowing a good thing when they heard it, took that chore off his hands

Currently, Spoon is touring with Rodney DeCroo in support of Trucker's Memorial, a gin and whisky soaked ode to life and lost love. "I met Rodney about a year ago at the Track, had seen him at a festival in Wells and really liked what he did. I'd had the idea for a project that would require kind of a John Prine/Iris DeMent approach and when I met Rodney I knew we could make it work.

The songs on Trucker's Memorial have a little more twang than my other stuff."

Take "Sweet Mr. Daniels." It's a Spoon original, accompanied by melancholy banjo, that opens with, "I had plans to lay you down in a bed of roses, but instead I did a face plant in your hedges." Twang? You bet. But the song also has a truthfulness and humour born out of experience.

"I wrote that one when I was on tour and stuck in a traffic jam on the 401 in Toronto at two in the morning. It's funny where songs can strike you."

The songs certainly hit the listener, and Wednesday (Aug 2) at the Sidetrack Café you'll get two sets featuring Spoon's vocals, banjo, guitar, mandolin, and washboard of Spoon, and DeCroo's guitar and vocals.

BIG DAVE HITS BIG BLUES

ONE OF WESTERN CANADA'S BEST BLUES musicians, Winnipeg's Big Dave McLean, is giving the fans what they want this week at the Commercial Hotel. Meeting John Hammond at the 1969 Mariposa Folk Festival set the course for McLean, who has been singing, and playing harp and guitar ever since. Authentic, heartfelt, and passionate, McLean brings everything he's got every time he hits the stage. Big Dave is joined by Edmonton's own Jimmy and the Sleepers through Saturday night.

Rob Zombie gives us all sorts of nightmares

ROB ZOMBIE
W/ Anthrax, Mon, Jul 31, Shaw Conference Centre (9797 Jasper Ave.), 6:30 pm, tnfo: 451-8000 or www.ticketmaster.ca, $42.50

TO GET THE OBVIOUS OUT OF THE WAY when Rob Zombie comes to E-Town on the 31st, it's not just going to be him, an acoustic guitar, and an overhead projector shining the word EVIL behind him.

"Oh, yeah. It's a big show—it'll all be there," he says calmly from Little Rock, Arkansas. What that means less generally is besides Zombie's hot-pants-on-the-undead-highway industrial music, we can expect a full compliment of fast-moving freaks, wicked makeup, assorted jiggling, and loud booms.

Which is to say—not such a stretch from the man's tremendously disturbing films like House of 1000 Corpses and The Devil's Rejects, which tend to rattle around in your head for years, regardless of how much you'd like to not think about them. Still, the concert will inarguably be more palatable, especially if you want it loud, hard and as close to completely insane as possible.

Getting into Rob Zombie's head is tougher than you might think. He doesn't tend to particularly go on about this own work, and for someone who gets asked a lot of questions, the "why?" of what he does is strangely elusive. He doesn't even remember his dreams.

"I don't know why I do anything," he says on what made him create two films about a murderous family who carved up teenagers and chased the last one in a bunny costume through a field until Zombie's real-life wife screen-stabbed her to death... then had those killers shredded in the sequel. I flash back to those satanic monsters all the time. "I don't know," he says again. "I guess I was thinking about it every day as well, so I decided to exorcise it and make a movie about it."

But why the sex and gore together so often in his work? "Anything that pushes any emotional extremes get along really well and are interesting to me. Those are definitely two of those."

He began as a prolific and creative Massachusetts kid growing up in the '70s, back when marketers were desperately trying to push the restraints of a post Comic Code Authority world. He and brother Michael (aka Powerman 5000) would make comics, Super 8 movies, and posters about whatever they riffed off.

> "He was everything. When I first got into him... I was pretty little, 8 or so. I just thought he was awesome."
> ROB ZOMBIE ON HIS EARLY HERO

"I had a lot of cards when I was a little kid. A lot of Star Wars cards, Planet of the Apes cards. And," he laughs, "Happy Days cards. Sadly, I collected every type of card that came out. It's the exact opposite now. I don't collect anything. I'm like having big empty spaces."

Zombie laughs when reminded of Wacky Packages, whose now-unimaginable parodies of mainstream products often got barfy and bloody. But as a performer it was Alice Cooper who really got him, "the first musical thing I was really into. I got into Alice Cooper and KISS at the same time. But he was everything. When I first got into him it was about 1973—so I was pretty little, 8 or so. I just thought he was awesome."

Zombie's managed to work with both now, recording with Coop, and in May playing with Slash and Gilby Clarke from Guns N' Roses, Anthrax's Scott Ian, Tommy Lee, and surprise guest Ace Frehley at a VH1 show, which wrapped its enthusiastic tongue around KISS all night.

Despite being such a visual guy, Zombie's songwriting tends to work in stages, with some exceptions.

"Certain songs like 'Living Dead Girl' I can picture all the way through to the video. With everything, I like the sound of it first. Educated Horses [the title of his new album] was sort of a lyric in songs that kept reappearing. It's an old circus phrase for trained animals. I just liked it and it sort of just stuck around. I knew it was a weird title. Titles are weird because they start transcending what they really mean. But it just seemed like the right thing to do."

Right? Well, that's relative in the sense of "holy" or "pure." But as a living iconographer, I have total faith in Zombie's choices, even if they still give me nightmares.

NEW YORKE Thom's da bom

ROGERS GETS OK

IS THIS THE SEASON OF MEGALO-CORPORATE mergers in the media world? After Bell Globemedia laid their gigantic greedy paws on the CHUM group, Rogers Communications finally confirmed what a lot of media insiders had been expecting when they announced they were taking over the OK Radio group in Western Canada.

This means Edmonton's Sonic 102.9 and CKER will now broadcast under Rogers' media umbrella, bringing the group's radio ownership to the level of 51 stations across the country. Through the $39.8 million deal, Rogers also acquired transmitters in Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie, firmly establishing themselves in Northern Alberta, a market that, until now, they had largely ignored

Rogers said they intend to leave formats alone at the stations and that they have a corporate philosophy of serving and getting involved in the communities where they operate

A hearing by the CRTC has been set for September 11, at which time the sale is expected to be approved

So... that means we won't see some kind of Sonic X or CXER any time soon? Hmmmm

THE BUZZ

Sure enough, it's still business as usual at Sonic 102.9, where music director Jason Manning is swimming among a sea of new releases But some are definitely more buzz-worthy than others and, in this case, I actually agree with him. Ha!

"One CD that cannot escape the repeat button right now is Thom Yorke's new solo disc called The Eraser," explains Manning. "When I read recently that Thom was working on a solo album I was curious. Was it going to be something different than his band Radiohead? Well after numerous listens, I have become hooked on this new offering. The first time I listened to The Eraser I was listening more intently to the lyrics Then the second time the music. Then after about 12 listens it slowly melds together—and they both come out well

"If you are a fan of Radiohead's Kid A you will be happy. This CD is already in my Top 10 for 2006. For an album with such a low profile and such little publicity—OK, Yorke is featured on the cover of Spin this month—The Eraser debuted at number two here in Canada. I am already looking forward to the forever-delayed new Radiohead disc."

TRIPLE THREAT

■ Forty-six tracks on three CDs... and we're talking about a full-fledged original triple album? Say what? Are you out of your fucking mind? What kind of delusional, ego-tripping emo band would even dare to do that? I mean, for crying out loud, Boys Night Out had the guts to make a streamlined concept album last year and I was already screaming "Blasphemy!" at the top of my lungs until I realized the boys had some heart and, dare I say it, merit

Now, The Early November have not only raised the bar, they've blown away any other contestant in the fight to be the "next pompous conceptual blowhards" (step aside, Red Hot Chili Peppers—you suck!) While The Mother, the Mechanic, and the Path (Drive-Thru, hhjkk) is insanely long (well over two hours and 1.5 minutes), it does have a few sparks of rock genius interspersed throughout, and the three-tiered conceptual idea is, granted, pretty cool. But to find those nifty little moments you'll have to suffer a little too much of the same bland, boring tripe everybody else sings. Less is more, kids, so pick the best and leave the rest

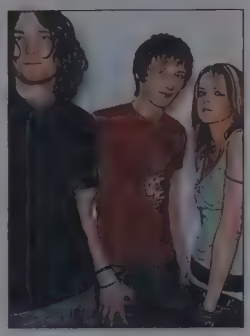
Young and restless

The Subways ready for their next stop



THE SUBWAYS
Mon, Jul 31, Starlite Room (10030-102 St.), 8 pm, Info: 482-7827 or www.starliteroom.ca, $15

BRITISH PUNK-ROCK TRIO THE SUBWAYS might be young and wide-eyed when it comes to the pressures of the music industry, but as of late, the Welwyn Garden City (UK) natives have been receiving their fair share of musical maturity lessons.

With the release of their debut album, Young For Eternity, and their single "Rock and Roll Queen" having been featured on The OC (as well as on The OC: Mix 5 soundtrack), The Subways were immediately launched into the whirlwind music industry, a place where they were forced to realize what sort of balance was needed between energetic youth and seasoned seniority.

"We're on tour at the moment, and we're at least ten years younger than all of the other bands, but it really doesn't feel like that," says 20-year-old bassist/vocalist Charlotte Cooper. "We don't necessarily want to be physically young for eternity, as our album name suggests, but we want to retain that amazement you have when you're young, and the way you take things for granted or see something for the first time. Sometimes, I think people can get a bit jaded, and we want to try to never do that."

Cooper and her band mates—which include 21-year-old boyfriend Billy Lunn (vocals, guitar) and his 19-year-old brother Josh Morgan (drums)—have also been experiencing, first-hand, the pressures that surround touring and recording. Lunn developed nodules on his vocal chords earlier in the year, causing The Subways to cancel two months' worth of shows.

"Billy had to rest completely; he wasn't allowed to talk or sing, and now he's still building his voice back up, but he's not allowed to talk before or after the show," Cooper says. "But he's sounding stronger than ever now, and I think [his illness] will work out for the best for all of us. We've probably been working too hard anyway."

The Subways might take things a bit easier this time around, music-wise, but according to Cooper, she and boyfriend Lunn are still going strong. Cooper and Lunn were together before the band formed (Lunn taught her how to play bass), and even though dating someone you're working with can be dicey, Cooper is confident that the band will never end up on dangerous ground.

"We've learned everything about being in a band together in the same way that we've learned about being in a relationship together. We've learned how to have our emotional relationship and then to have a business relationship. Now it's gotten to the stage where it feels very normal."

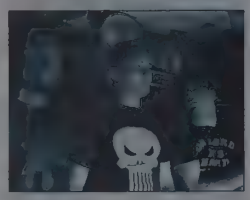
Too cool for the pool

Calgary's The Dudes no prairie-emo band



THE DUDES
W/ Curtis Santiago and the Vendetta Republic, Jeremy Nischuk, Fri, Jul 28, 9 pm, Sidetrack Café (10238-104 St.), Info. 421-1326 or www.sidetrackcafe.com, $8

WITH A MONIKER LIKE "THE DUDES," YOU'D expect vocalist Dan Vacon to talk at a snail's pace and spew out slang words as often as the Pacific waves hit the beach. However, although the Calgary alt-rock outfit does enjoy hanging out by the ocean, their idea of fun in the sand doesn't involve grabbing a surfboard or checking out the ladies,

"I'm just turning over rocks, trying to see what crazy things I can find beside the ocean, but it's mostly crabs," Vacon says over his cell phone from Victoria. "I saw this one thing, though, that looked like a giant tongue or something. It was like having a really crappy birthday and someone being like, 'I made you a present!'

"I kind of want to take a starfish home. It would be like a medallion with spikes and a mouth. I also want to taste one. Ok, no I won't."

Vacon might be able to restrain himself from consuming the beachside wildlife, but the one thing both him and the rest of the band couldn't resist was naming themselves The Dudes

From Vacon's perspective, the quartet was just that: a bunch of "dudes" kicking around in Calgary and making music. Now and again, though, the guys sometimes wish they'd picked a name with perhaps a little more meaning.

"I used to be kind of ashamed about it," he admits, "when someone would ask who I played for, and I'd be like, 'Uh, we're The Dudes.' A lot of people expect some So-Cal punk-rock act or something. Then again, it's so funny when you tell someone you're in The Dudes, because they automatically say 'dude' in their own special way; like, 'Oh The Duuudes! The Duuuuudes!'

The Dudes are definitely detached from any emo-rock instrumentals or misty-eyed lyrics, and it's evident with their latest album Brain Heart Guitar. The record highlights the band's organic, prairie-grown fervor and straight-up style, which are characteristics that got them signed to their new label, Load.

The one thing Vacon stresses about Brain Heart Guitar, though, is that it's not a sell-out, despite the fact that its best songs come from their previous work.

"I was worried that people would feel ripped off," Vacon says. "We're trying to take [Brain Heart Guitar] to a wider audience, so we just wanted the strongest album we could come up with. I feel like we're letting down our local fans a bit, but we'll put out something else that's new real quick."

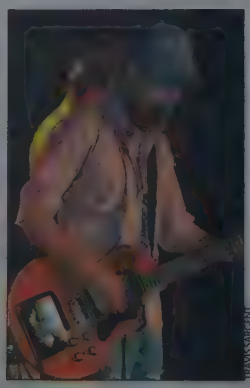
Field of streams

Summer's hottest night a Sidetrack's delight



TRAVIS SARGENT

FIELD AND STREAM
W/ No Hands, Sat, Jul 20, Sidetrack Café

"HAVE YOU GUYS EVER BEEN TO WINNIPEG? So you know about the syphilis problem then," remarked Field and Stream front man Nikelas Johnson.

No stranger to infections himself, Johnson is looking especially trim after an unfortunate bout with mono knocked 20 pounds off of his already slight frame. Being out of commission for nearly two months set back the release of their album, but that didn't stop Edmonton's indie elite from filling the Sidetrack on what'd been one of the hottest nights of the summer.

Openers No Hands pleased the crowd with their intellectual brand of rock 'n' roll, although most were temporarily blinded by the light emanating from bass playing sensation and self-proclaimed messiah James Stewart.

Already dripping with sweat, Field and Stream hit the stage, drinks in tow, and proceeded to drop the jaws of anyone within earshot. Brooding country ballads, eerie accordion-driven folk, and whirling keyboard noises filled their set, with the band taking equal cues from the Black Heart Procession, Hank Williams, and the Velvet Underground. An open copy of the novel Texas by James A. Michener sat in front of guitar/banjo/accordion player Brody Cameron, who seemed to switch instruments every time I visited the bar.

REVIEW

The sullen set of geographic love songs wasn't without its lighter moments, usually provided by keyboard player Brad Sime, who quipped, "This one's not about how handjobs suck. Hi mom and dad," before singing a brief song about the Ice-Man's first college party.

Borrowing riffs from "Suicide Is Painless" and ending with a brilliantly dour cover of Heart's "Barracuda" that went over the heads of most of the front row, Field and Stream lived up to their reputation as one of the city's most charming and subversive bands.

SHOUT OUT OUT OUT OUT [L]
Not Saying/Just Saying
(Nimis Wlcm)

THIS ALBUM DOES NOT NEED MORE COWBELL Hell, Not Saying/Just Saying is one big bovine-tipping marathon and its clitter-clatter (cue "Self Loathing Rulz") is a resounding indication of how crazy SO4's vibe is.

It's a strong debut bridging the gap between the band's rock roots (holy bass!) and their vocoder-soaked, handclapped, and keyboard-twisted electro gut-fire—especially on the instant classic "Forever Indebted" and the bouncy "Dude You Feel Electrical." But somehow, Not Saying/Just Saying sometimes feels drawn-out—the satirical, phase-and-swoop production on "Your Shitty Record Won't Mix Itself" misses the mark, and a couple overlong, slicked-up numbers fail to capture the band's gonzo live energy ("Inspiration > Competition," "Procrastinator's Fight Song").

Fortunately, the album's sweeping arch constantly pulls the listener towards the smash-crash drums/cowbell mayhem of "Chicken Soup For The Fuck You," the wobbly "Do I Stutter?" sealing the deal with a question mark that leaves you breathless, wanting more. But for all its strengths, Not Saying/Just Saying shows some annoying flaws, and whereas SO4 are still one of the most exciting live acts in the country, their debut's long-term appeal is debatable.

FRANÇOIS MARCHAND

ELVIS COSTELLO & ALLEN TOUSSAINT
The River in Reverse
(Verve)

ELVIS COSTELLO IS AN ARTIST WHO HAS literally done it all.

He's past the point of reinvention, as far as I'm concerned, and someone who has managed to stay afloat and be as important as he's proven to be for so long has to be. His latest effort, with New Orleans real-deal funk and soul keyboardist Allen Toussaint, comes at a point in his career when he can look back and admit to having done the "folk thing" with his solo tours, the "punk thing" with the Attractions in the '70s, and even—dare we say it—the dreadful "jazz thing," thanks to the inspiration from his newest wife, Wal-Mart jazz schnobster Diana Krall.

But for all the times you can criticize Elvis Costello, you have to remember that you're speaking of a living musical god. Elvis Costello changes musical styles as easily as I check my e-mail. It's at that point that the comparisons end, because I'm just a music critic, and he's just released The River in Reverse.

Better sing its praises, then.

EAMON MCGRATH

GRANT-LEE PHILLIPS
Nineteeneighties
(Zoe)

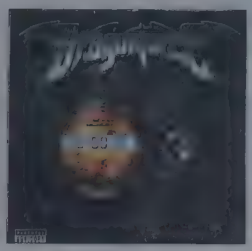
NO DOUBT GRANT-LEE PHILLIPS ACTUALLY was into the bands of the 1980s. No doubt Phillips, of the defunct Grant Lee Buffalo, wandered around his high school halls in a jean jacket festooned with Waterboys pins, teaching himself bar chords on a Friday night, all the while thinking he'd show them all, one day. Phillips is as talented as he is shameless, and an album of "alternative" '80s covers is a handy cash grab fuelled by old fans and new (he's on Gilmore Girls)

Covers are for fundraising tribute albums, b-sides, Starbucks add-on sales, and the second encore. Nineteeneighties is capable but pointless, with interesting missteps (Hawaiian-tinged "Wave of Mutilation"), sacrilege (the Smiths, Joy Division), and crap ("Boys Don't Cry" sounds like an Ativan-doped monkey unevenly cranking a honky-tonk hurdy-gurdy), with the balance falling into the "why bother?" category, since they're so similar to the originals

Besides, Hem already did REM's "So Central Rain" on No Word From Tom and Radiogram rootsified New Order on All The Way Home. Get with the retro program, man

MARY CHRISTA O'KEEFE



DRAGONFORCE
Inhuman Rampage
(Roadrunner)

DRAGONFORCE WILL NOT ONLY ROCK YOUR face off, but they will shatter your bones with sound, rupture your organs with raw metal force, and leave your twisted, still-breathing corpse aching for more—with lightning-fast leads, inhumanly timed drums running at more RPMs than my car is capable of, and trade-offs between guitar and keyboard that are too smooth to be real

To top it off, the piercing power of a voice that commands the instruments to follow it into a battle of mythical fantasy lyricism

It's devastating stuff that demands you suddenly grow balls big enough to match the battle-axe you've got to heft into combat against the un-metal hoards

It's a big step up from everyday power metal and, while it may one day become as generic as Norwegians in studded black leather and face paint, right now it's a sound experience that should not be missed

JAMES ELFORD

LOS LONELY BOYS
Sacred
(Epic/Sony BMG)
★★★½

FORGETTING FOR A MOMENT THAT THEIR name is suspiciously reminiscent of another Latino-influenced blues-rock band (Los Lobos, anyone?), Los Lonely Boys can certainly be said to have a style all their own. Lead vocalist Henry Garza proclaims as much on the album's opener, "My Way," but this is already refreshingly apparent well before the lyrics kick in

The three-piece group, now with two proper studio albums under their ornate belt-buckles, is a perfect fusion of smooth Latino rhythms and scorching hot, Texas-style guitar. Their catchy Spanglish lyrics and searing guitar work, exemplified on "Texican Style," is sure to bring the term into the popular musical lexicon—if it's not their own coinage to start with

And it seems to be one of the band's main priorities as well: this largely poppy ("Roses"), family-friendly ("One More Day") record is clearly intended to garner some commercial airtime south of the border—the Canada-U.S. border, that is. Still, hopefully stations on our side won't shy away from this tough-looking but sweet-sounding group either

ADAM GAUMONT

DAYS IN THE LIFE
TOM MURRAY

Thursday: Graham Coxon, Love Travels at Illegal Speeds, EMI/Parlophone.

The Blur guitarist [illegible] some nostalgic period of British punk-pop as though possessed by the malevolent spirit of Boston's Tom Scholz, or if Pete Shelley studied under Foreigner after Singles Going Steady. Frightening!

Friday: Nizlopi, Half These Songs Are About You, FDM.

The Brits ran this duo up to the top of the charts six months ago with "JCB Song," an undistinguished, forgettable tune that likely scored on the basis of sheer inoffensiveness. The rest of the album works the same terrain—slickly produced folk-rock with Luke Concannon crossing a dead-on vocal impression of Counting Crows' Adam Duritz with the lyrical concerns of a 21st century Seals & Croft.

Saturday: Steve Earle, Live at Montreux 2005, Eagle Records.

Earle in full acoustic, early Dylan or Woody Guthrie mode at the famous Swiss jazz festival—wheezy harmonica, angry political/social jibes ("Jerusalem," "Christmas in Washington," "Ellis Unit One," "Rich Man's War") plus the expected "Copperhead Road" for those who never quite understood his shift to topical songwriting.

Sunday: New York Dolls, One Day It Will Please Us to Remember Even This, Roadrunner.

It could've been a train wreck—given the chance to trade in on Morrissey's fan boy adulation, a documentary on recently deceased bassist Arthur Kane, plus a slew of books acknowledging their importance as a key punk ingredient they could just have easily taken the advance money, pumped out a piece of crap and ran for all they were worth. Thank the gods of rock 'n' roll they didn't, and even if the only surviving members are (rhythm guitarist) Syl Sylvain and (singer) David Johansen it still sounds like a Dolls album—rough, crass, juvenile, Stones and soul music obsessed, off the cuff, and ridiculous. It's lightweight, and nowhere near a patch on the first two albums, but "Fishnets and Cigarettes" and "Gimme Love & Turn on the Light" touch on the usual Dolls areas of interest, and first single "Dance Like a Monkey" is so utterly ridiculous that it deserves to be a hit.

Monday: Ed Harcourt, The Beautiful Lie, EMI.

The idea is good—Rufus Wainwright channeling Tom Waits—and the execution is even better, but something doesn't quite come off here, at least as much as it did on his acknowledged masterpiece, 2001's Here Be Monsters. Some undeniably powerful moments though—"Late Night Partner"—and still better than 99.9% of the oversaturated singer-songwriter crowd. A cult hero before, a cult hero he continues to be.

Tuesday: The Rosewood Thieves, From the Decker House, V2.

Likeable, out-of-time country rock three parts John Lennon, one part The Band—if they had never gotten around to recording their own albums. At 20, Erick Jordan is already one hell of a talented singer-songwriter and thus worth watching, but true music nerds will want to check this EP out for the presence of pianist Bob Dorough, composer of the Schoolhouse Rock classic "Conjunction Junction."

Wednesday: Oliver Jones, One More Time, Justin Time.

Montreal's other piano legend (he learned from Oscar Peterson's sister), Jones sticks to a mostly classic line of jazz—uncluttered, bluesy, and strong on melody. He's got a tough rhythm section behind him (bassist Dave Young, drummer Jim Doxas) and a few horns scattered here and there, but the general emphasis is on Jones' elegant keyboard work, as it should be. No big surprises here, no leaps of artistic faith, just some fine originals, a couple of deeply felt cover choices, and a gorgeous version of "Body and Soul."

FOR YOUR CHANCE TO WIN!

It's an unusually quiet Saturday for the Monkey Island nightclub on Whyte Ave. The bouncers... sorry... the doormen are restless.

"$2.75 highballs, ladies, no cover," head doorman Waylan Hoven pitches to a group walking by in tight capris, spaghetti-strap tank tops, and strappy stilettos. "Highballs $2.75, no cover."

They keep walking.

"The Attic's got highballs for $1.75," another group of lovelies counters as they strut by the door. It's a tough biz, Hoven tells me. Across the street, Stolli's has dollar highballs.

The sales routine is startling.

Given that they work so hard to get people in the door, it's hard to imagine these guys kicking anybody out.

But Hoven assesses each patron coming through the door. He watches out for the guy who refuses a high five or handshake. And the good buddy routine is more than customer service: it lets him get up close to patrons so he can better assess how intoxicated they are.

This is the doorman's contradictory art, hiding intimidation and muscle behind a big, friendly smile.

Hustling

"Pinz" is working the same routine, pushing his special mix of rough, small town charm. A thick belt-buckle straps his t-shirt into his jeans, and a heavy small-town curve is bent into the brim of his ball cap.

He's a rave scene security veteran turned bouncer. He once had a gun pointed in his face at a rave. Asked what do you do when you're staring down the barrel of a gun, he replies, "You shut up and listen."

A licensed security guard, Pinz wears a collapsible baton while he's on shift. He assures me it's not for striking, only to help tangle up a rowdy's arms. I stop myself from telling him the only time I've seen one used was in video of the Rodney King beating.

Between midway barker-styled pitches for drinks the team chats up regulars, and flirts heavily with the many glammed-up women on the street.

"You're gonna call us a bunch of man-whores, aren't you?" Hoven challenges me. No... I wasn't going to say anything about that.

At 10:15, it's still slow, and a third bouncer, Damon (a.k.a. "Dagg") begins lobbying Hoven for a night off. The club is dead, yo, so he goes inside to hang out, but not before trying to hustle a tab.

Bachelorette parties are sustaining the business at this time of night. A group of ladies on a scavenger hunt collect big at the door. Pinz obligingly shoves a bill in one hunter's bra, Hoven gives another a piggyback ride, and Damon offers them all a round on the house. They pile in the door.

Another bachelorette party gets the same dose of Tom Selleck charm and comes in. As the club fills, it becomes clear that the female patrons are a form of capital. With over 20 partying women inside, the door team is able to sway a bachelor wearing panties and a blue slip top through the door, along with all his friends. Suddenly, Monkey Island looks like a place to be.

The negotiator

Down the street at Filthy McNasty's, Darren Peacock is dealing with a big queue. He rapidly flips IDs in front of his eyes and gets the crowd inside, clicking off the number of patrons on a small counter. There's no need for patter here.

Peacock, a 410 lb giant, grew up in Westlock, migrated to the city, and ended up on the streets. After being arrested for doing some "survival" shoplifting—"shoes and that sort of thing"—he decided to do something better with his life. He worked security at the small town bar, then got hired at the New City Suburbs.

"They had this 6-foot 3-inch tall black chick working security. She told me if I could drag her 10 feet kicking and screaming I had the job."

But, like every bouncer I asked, Peacock emphasized that he rarely gets physical with patrons. Communication comes first, and if you're good, it almost always works.

Peacock stops talking and heads off a guy wearing a tinsel-fringed cone cap and a Hawaiian lei.

"Sorry bud, you're way too drunk..."

The would-be patron slurs an unintelligible protest.

"I'm sorry man, it's not up for debate. You can't come in tonight."

"That's soo fuckin' hurtin'..."

"You know what: if you came and you weren't already drunk, it would've been no problem."

"I'm fucking hammered... And, ya know, birthday boy, man..."

Eventually Peacock wears him down. These situations are a holiday compared to his experiences doing after-hours security.

Dark memories

Back then Peacock had the misfortune of witnessing a fight where one gang member stabbed another, then slashed open the belly of second.

"The guy was rambling that he had lost his keys. It wasn't until I had him well inside the club that I noticed his stomach. His guts were literally hanging out.

"He was in total shock. I told him to look down and he told me to shut up, he needed his keys. Then he got weak and I held him up from behind, I was holding his guts in his stomach until an ambulance came."

Peacock finally left the after-hours scene when the club's manager told him he had to quit busting certain "favoured" drug dealers at the door. When he refused, the manager threatened to hurt his family.

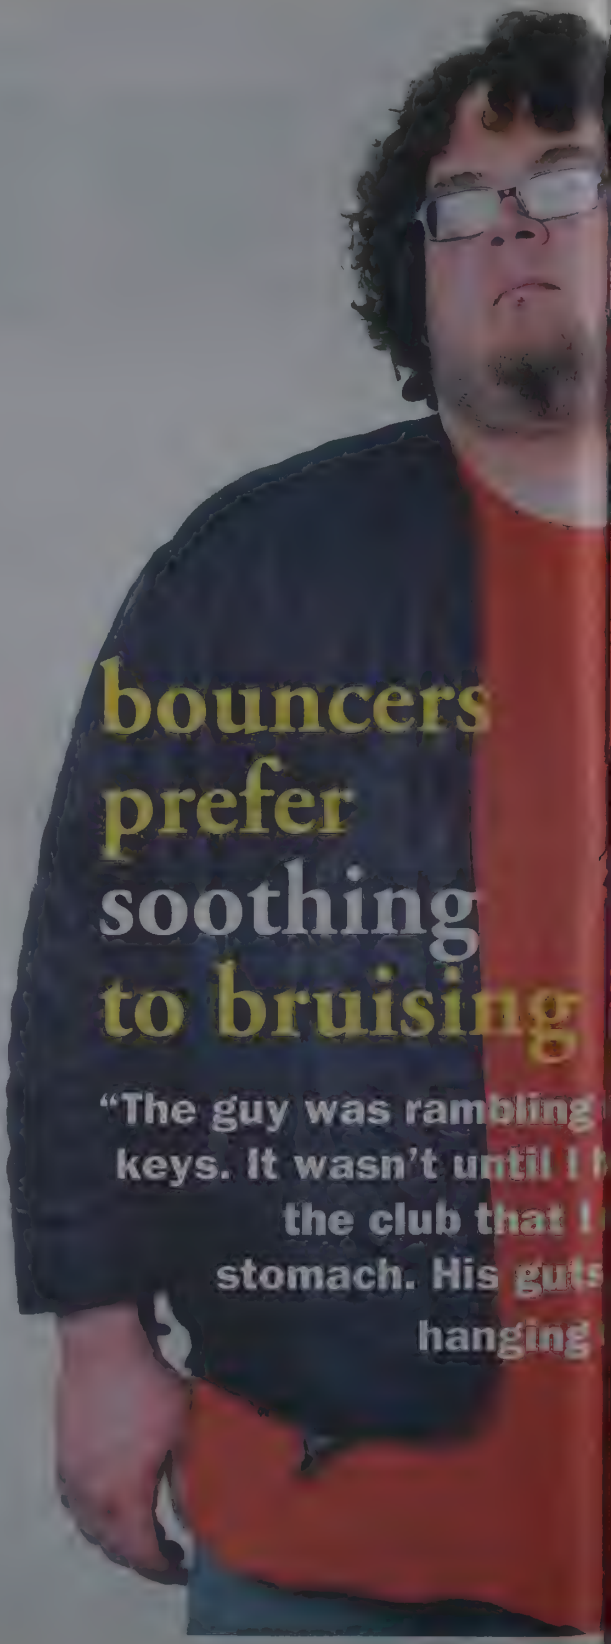
The Old Strathcona strip's problems are lightweight for Peacock and other bouncers. Many have worked massive west-end clubs, like The Joint and Rum Jungle, and are happy to deal with the smaller number of patrons allowed in the nightclubs here. A bar with 150 patrons is easier to feel safe in than one with a 1000.

"At clubs like Rum Jungle, the bouncers aren't in control, the managers aren't in control. It's the patrons that run the place," Pinz tells me.

Serving and protecting

As midnight approaches the door gets hectic, and the dance floor is bumping. A couple beat officers enter the club. They come out with their hands on a lanky young guy with his hair in cornrows and wearing a baby-blue and white track suit. Two girls start screaming and crying. Dagg appears and promises both of them that he'll make sure the guy gets bailed out. The cops pull plastic baggies from the detainee's pockets before taking him away in a cruiser.

They scold Hoven for allowing him in without ID. Hoven shrugs. The guy is 26 years old, he tells me. Technically, the bar's done nothing wrong.



A tension lingers while the officers are around

An arrest is obviously bad news for the club's rep. Ironically, though, many bouncers see law enforcement as the logical evolution of the career

Hoven once tried to become an officer but says he was rejected because he is colour-blind He still holds out hope that he could be eligible for the SWAT team. Across the street at Stolli's, an affable 25-year-old body-builder/bouncer named R. J. says he wants to join the Edmonton Police Service once he's done school. And down the street at the Savoy, rugby-player turned doorman Chad Moore is completing studies in criminology and plans to enter law enforcement

R. J. and Moore both have friends on the force. And, the Monkey Island crew tells me, Red's nightclub had a deal that allowed bouncers to enter the EPS after two years on the job, because staff were trained by the same people who train the cops.

Closing time

With all the flirting and schoolyard humour at the front door it's hard to imagine these guys behind the blue wall But, as last call passes, the enforcement side of the job becomes evident. The door closes, and entry is not negotiable.

It gets crazy at this time of night," Hoven says. "Everybody's dropping names. They know the D.J., they know the manager, they know some guy who doesn't even work here anymore."

The unlocked door opens a crack and Pinz pushes back on a guy who insists that he should be inside As he shuts the door, the guy shoves his foot in the door to keep it open. Pinz opens it again and chases the guy off Dagg is right behind him

Hoven points to a guy dancing near the cigarette machine with his shirt unbuttoned all the way down, presumably to show of a chest tattoo

"Matty, kick that guy out," he orders. It's a quick and silent operation that occurs without protest from the ejectee. The guy looked harmless. I wonder if they're putting on a show for [illegible]

"I told him to button up his shirt seven times tonight," Hoven says

It's all about respect, he explains. Respect is key. You lip off the doorman, you're out. Dis respect a waitress, you're out. Don't obey the rules. and you're ou

With the doors closed, and the crowd thinning, I leave the neon lit bump-and-grind scene and head home. I pass by the same bare chested guy accosting a group of four wo[illegible] outside a 7-11, crooning crude come-ons

"Learn some manners," one spits back, her voice dripping with acid. "Show some respect

R.J. DEMERS, STOLLI'S NIGHTCLUB
25 YEARS OLD, 230 LBS

There's a good side and a bad side to this industry, how do you handle that? What about crime?

I've known bouncers to steal money, bribe money, steal drugs, sell drugs. It's like any field there's always a dark side. You gotta find a club where there's good guys all around. You find a good club, you stick with it... Stolli's is great

How about violence? I've seen pools of blood outside on the sidewalk.

As soon as it leaves that door, we're out of it If they want to go kill each other on the street, that's not our department. Anything that happens inside the club, that's our department. We take care of if

Do you take grease? What's the best offer you've ever had?

Grease... sure guys offer it. Best offer I ever had. A couple guys from The Bounce came in one night and offered me playoff tickets.

Did you take them?

Of course! They're Oilers playoff tickets

DARREN PEACOCK, FILTHY MCNASTY'S,
26 YEARS OLD, 6'4" 410 LBS.

What do you like about this?

I enjoy the challenge of dealing with problems every day, and working in customer service at the same time, showing people there's other ways to deal with being tense and drunk, other than just getting your face smashed in.

How do you deal with a rowdy?

I've never in eight years had to punch a guy... You put a guy in some holds to calm him down, put him against a wall, gently, and put his arm behind his back and just keep telling him, "look man, calm down."

You get offered money to jump the line?

Guys try and give me a hundred bucks a person, fifty bucks a person. I don't take it. First of all, if a guy gives you fifty bucks and you let him cut in front of everyone in the line, you're fucking disrespecting every other person in the line. Secondly, that guy's first impression of you is this guy is a fucking bitch. I can give him money and I can do anything I want inside, because I own that fucking guy.

What's the most dangerous situation you had to deal with?

I was head bouncer at afterhours [club Y] for two years. There was a really big gang presence there. I had machetes swung in my face. I've had lead pipes swung. I've had broom handles broken over my back. I've been attacked like 30 guys on two... I had kids overdosing on E [ecstasy], guys going into epileptic seizures, ambulances, fuck... it was ridiculous.

CHAD MOORE, SAVOY,
33 YEARS OLD, 5' 8" 180 LBS

How long have you been doing bar security?

About four or five years. Originally I was with Druid security. Obviously you make friends working with the public... I just progressed from concerts and cultural events to working in the bar industry. I just enjoyed the nightlife.

A club like this must be the nicer end of the spectrum for your line of work...

Yeah. I was working at the Blues on Whyte before this. Two totally different ends of the spectrum. Obviously there's different clientele. But you have the same issues: over-service, meaning drinks, over-crowding, and just knowing when someone shouldn't be coming your establishment with their behaviour on the Ave.

You're not the biggest guy I've seen doing this work. Do you have any special techniques?

Well, your tone of voice, and the words that you choose can de-escalate any situation, you hope. Verbal judo is a term being thrown around out there. You can actually take a course in it. And it helps when you're talking with someone, you can judge their intoxication level.

What's the most dangerous situation you've ever been in?

I can't remember when or where, but someone pulled a knife. You ask someone to step back because they're causing problems with people coming into your establishment, and they pull a knife. You just back away, and try and make sure he stays away from your establishment.

You talk like you've seen this more than once, a knife coming out.

Well, yeah. Standing on the corner here, this is a busy corner. I've seen people run to their car get bats, and they chase people down the back alley. It's definitely out there.

WAYLON HOVEN, MONKEY ISLAND
25 YEARS OLD, 5'9" 245 LBS

How long have you been doing this?

Since I was 18. The first job I got was at the Purple Onion. The doorman said if you can chase that guy down, you've got a job. The guy was bigger than me. I chased him down and got the job

What's the craziest thing you've ever seen?

It was at a bar in the west end. It consisted of beer tubs getting thrown around, then it was every man for himself. It started with two buddies joking around. A doorman told them to break it up, and they took it out on him and went crazy. I hate to say it like this, but there were 14 doormen and we had to prevail. It was a 1,700 person bar. We're dealing with crowds of stupid numbers.

What about weapons? Do you have to deal with them?

Yeah, I've just come to accept it and learn how to handle it. Me and a buddy do a course called CQB... It's similar to what SWAT does, but it's more doorman-related. It teaches you how to talk to someone, how to take a weapon from someone. It's a big course... It's four doormen who have been [working] 6-10 years. We hope to get it regulated by the government.

That's being looked at now by the Solicitor General, licensed doormen?

Yeah, a lot of security groups are trying to get the training rights for it. It will definitely be a cash cow when everyone has to maintain this criteria this certificate. They say it's coming by [illegible]

How do you deal with grease? Do you take it?

It's hard to quote on grease... Grease is a tough topic. If you know how to do it, you can master it. It depends on the people. If I think a group is going to cause problems, yeah, I'll set a price, hopefully they won't want to pay it and they'll leave... The better clientele, when it comes down to grease, they will pay because they want to have a good time.

TURNS OUT I NEED THIS
Bruno (Jérémie Renier) tries to un-sell his baby

Sympathy for the dimwit

Dardennes make films that feel like documentaries

L'ENFANT (THE CHILD)
Directed by Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne. Starring Jérémie Renier, Jul 28 & 30, 7 pm; Jul 29 & 31, 9 pm, Metro Cinema, Zeidler Hall, Citadel Theatre. ★★★★☆

THE SUN RARELY SHINES ON LIEGE When it does, it sheds little warmth.

The Belgian city has become the perennial backdrop for the feature films of Jean-Pierre and Luc Dardenne, a grimy grey microcosm of the post-merciful world, where people have run out of sympathy for their fellow citizens, where charity and compassion have become the domain of bureaucratic institutions, where personal morality has been eroded by the need to survive.

The Brothers Dardenne don't tell you this, of course. The feeling arises from watching their austere, meticulous narratives and contending with the feelings and ideas they unfailing arouse.

Though less emotionally overwhelming than their previous film, Le Fils (The Son), L'Enfant reckons with some of the same overwhelming questions—How do we forgive? How can we be forgiven?—while confronting us with the reality that those who need compassion most are often those who seem to deserve it least Bruno (Jérémie Renier) certainly comes across as undeserving. An overgrown street urchin who makes his way in life through petty larceny and panhandling, Bruno cultivates a retinue of barely adolescent thieves and watches with a big, dumb grin on his face as his ill-gotten gains pass through his hands like water. With money pouring in all the time, who needs to hold onto it?

Bruno is so unflaggingly self-centered that he barely bats an eye when his girlfriend Sonia (Déborah François) presents to him his newborn son. Having sublet his flat for a couple of days, Bruno just checks his young family into the nearest shelter—he's blown his money on a fancy motorbike jacket and leather hat—and then takes off to unload a stolen camera in a nearby tavern. The baby's pram becomes a prop for soliciting more generous handouts on the streetcorner.

L'Enfant confronts us with the reality that those who need compassion most are often those who seem to deserve it least.

Nor does Bruno have any compunctions when a chance arises to sell his child on the black market. Getting the huge pay-off is foremost in his mind; explaining where the child went to its mother is a detail to be worked out later.

Much to Bruno's surprise, she doesn't take it that well and he's forced—by fear of arrest if Sonia goes to the police—to retrieve the baby, thus putting him in the debt of very serious, very dangerous people. Clearly things will get worse for our benighted protagonist before they get better.

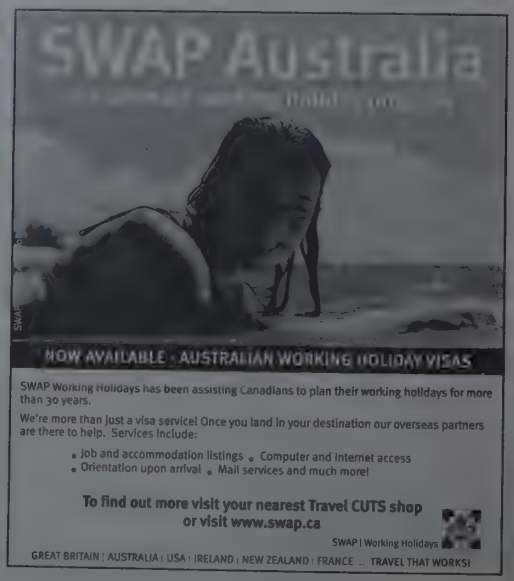
The Dardennes made documentaries for two decades before turning to features, and the low-key, unmediated feel of direct cinema wholly informs their storytelling esthetic.

L'Enfant seems to be unfolding for the first time with the camera an invisible witness to mundane and harrowing moments in Bruno's life, observing the sale of a baby and an afternoon bus ride with equal dispassion. Each moment of the film is so exactingly constructed that it's hard to believe we're watching performances, much less a work of fiction.

Renier, who played the conscience-striken son of a callous immigrant trafficker in the Dardennes' La Promesse, looks like he's aged more than the 10 years that have elapsed since that film, his craggy features an impassive mask which may or may not belie the first stirrings of his soul. At the same time, Renier also channels Bruno's essential boyishness and vulnerability, his unselfconscious ignorance about the world he thinks he understands.

Some might argue that the Dardennes have been been working the same patch of soil too long, that L'Enfant feels like a reiteration of their previous work, especially as a follow-up to the stunning Le Fils. I'd argue that L'Enfant just proves the effectiveness of their method—that of leaving room for the audience's emotions and moral sense to enter the world of the film and seek out vestiges of hope and redemption. If anything, we need as much of this substantial, intelligent, and challenging cinema as we can get.

SCOTT LINGLEY



Workhorse Woody

Stop him if you've heard this one before

SCOOP
Directed by Woody Allen, Starring Scarlett Johansson, Hugh Jackman, Woody Allen, Now Playing, ★★★☆

ONCE UPON A TIME, WOODY ALLEN was a very funny man. In fact, it may not be inaccurate to say that he had already done his best work before he started writing and making feature films, (or hijacking and overhauling those of others, as in his first film, What's Up Tiger Lily?, a trashy chop-socky movie he"improved" by adding his own vaguely racist English dialogue).

The truth is, all of the jokes upon which he's tried to hang his comedies, from Take the Money and Run (1969) to Annie Hall (1977) to Zelig (1983) to Small Time Crooks (2000), have already appeared elsewhere, whether in The New Yorker or Without Feathers, or as brief sketches on Your Show of Shows (where they benefited enormously from the consummate timing of old-style vaudevillians like Sid Caesar and Carl Reiner), or on the priceless early LPs of Woody's stand-up routines.

If, while watching any of the aforementioned quintessential Allen movies, you somehow get the feeling that you've already heard the one about how Commentary and Dissent merged to form Dysentery, or the one about how the paranoid Jew began to hear everything as a racial slur, even polite enquiries, ("Did you eat? Get it? Did Jew?"), it's because you have, at least three other times.

Thus Scoop, a playful, but perhaps overly cutesy fantasy about a deceased journalist coming back from the dead to give greenhorn school reporter Sondra Pransky (Scarlett Johansson) a tip-off about the true, and most unlikely, culprit in a series of murders, is likely to be more funny for someone who's never seen or heard of Allen or his Manhattan Murder Mystery, which follows the same general outline, although without the supernatural interference.

If one were to give Woody the benefit of the doubt, it could be said that the new film is really a sophisticated postmodern riff on his own oeuvre, but, what it all boils down to in the end, and what Scoop is really all about, and chock-full of, is his old shtick.

A variation on the Jew joke is here, along with a few others that seem vaguely familiar, and, as if more proof of a too-clever-by-half self-referentiality were needed, Allen returns to acting in the role of Sid Waterman, a B-grade entertainer.

A minor-league magician who goes by the stage-name of Splendini, Waterman is a nebbish Bob Hope-style coward caught up in the investigation in spite of himself. His Vegas-style chat-up to whoever will watch his card tricks, whether they be members of the chattering classes at an English garden party, or the passengers on the Grim Reaper's boat across the river Styx, invariably begins with the evergreen standard, "You've been a great audience.."

Still, old jokes can be good jokes, providing they're told right, and that those longueurs which give the audience the opportunity to realize that they're being sold a bill of goods are avoided at all costs. Lots of gags, told quickly, will always make up for a certain poverty in content, and, unlike some of his recent movies, in which he drops lone, and not terribly funny jokes into vast oceans of boredom with the arrogance of a schoolboy fishing for a gold star and a pat on the head for being clever, Scoop gets the pacing question just about right.

Granted, it's certainly nowhere near as snappy as the classic newspaper comedies, like The Front Page and His Girl Friday that the script makes the key error of alluding to. However, things chug along nicely, and there's something to be said for the film clocking in at under ninety minutes, a running time brief enough so that the running joke never quite runs out of steam.

Scarlett Johansson, Woody's latest shiksa princess, looking strangely like Mia Farrow in an entirely redundant pair of wire frame glasses, is the real standout, injecting fresh life into tired material, with what seems like an uncharacteristic élan. If this isn't quite the frothy soufflé it should be, her impeccable performance as the not-so-dumb blond makes it seem so, and her chemistry with Allen even makes him seem slightly less insufferable.

Actually, Woody's brand of screen-magic is just about on a par with his alter-ego Splendini's sleight of hand. Scoop is not so much thrilling as pleasantly surprising, like having a coin pulled out of one's nose. It's cheap, but it still draws a few snickers from the back row.

Shyamalan's career more soluble than he thinks

LADY IN THE WATER
Directed by M. Knight Shyamalan, Starring Paul Giamatti, Bryce Dallas Howard, M. Night Shyamalan and Bob Balaban, Now playing, ★☆☆☆½

BY NOW YOU'VE HEARD THE OVERwhelmingly bad reviews for M. Night Shyamalan's Lady in the Water, but let it be known that this is one of the most daring films in recent memory. It dares you to wade through its convoluted, bogus fairytale plot; it dares you to figure out exactly what the hell its $55 million production budget was spent on; and it double-dog dares you to have confidence in Shyamalan's abilities as a filmmaker.

Those words are harsh for a guy who's made some of the most interesting and popular mainstream movies in the last decade, but well-deserved for a film made by an artist who not only cast himself as a sort-of prophet, but left Disney, the studio that built his career, for Warner Bros. when the big mouse refused to bankroll the film as it was presented to them.

Shyamalan plays one of the many tenants/undeveloped characters living at an average Philadelphia apartment complex cared for by Cleveland Heep—Paul Giamatti in his usual state of wounded disrepair. By day Heep goes about his mundane superintendent duties for a variety of eccentrics, including the cat lady, the crossword wiz, the near catatonic who watches the news all day, and the guy who exercises one side of his body only (Six Feet Under's Freddy Rodríguez). At night he retires to the groundskeeper shack, where one evening he discovers someone in the apartment's pool after hours.

Bryce Dallas Howard, Ron Howard's daughter and star of The Village, appears as an ethereal water-nymph named Story (one of many dumb names), who's on the run from a wolf-like creature called a Narf (see!) while trying to find a Chosen One needed to change the world. Heep helps her figure just who in the building is the Chosen One, and discovers a whole bunch of the tenants have vital roles to play in a (ridiculous, confusing) prophecy.

Shyamalan has created an overblown mythology that might have worked in an epic fantasy novel for teens.

However, aside from the Narf, the director never really shows any of the fantastic stuff his characters drone on about because the entire plot takes place at the apartment, unfolding as an orgy of inane exposition. Could one CGI dog possibly blow that 55 mil budget? Did Shyamalan shoot Lady in the Water on film stock made from crushed Faberge Eggs and moon rocks?

The story itself is told in such an amateur fashion, it's hard to believe this is the same guy who created the clever Sixth Sense and the brilliant Unbreakable. The "twists" consist mainly of Heep coming to sudden realizations or simply being told another piece of info by Story. Embarrassingly forced, with seemingly normal characters suddenly having total faith in the supernatural, it's a fairytale that seems written by a child, rather than for one.

Shyamalan's previous work is far from perfect—the cheesy melodrama in the otherwise chilling Signs, for example. But even the unforgivably lame reveal in The Village was at least preceded by a gripping build-up. Lady in the Water certainly feels like a Shyamalan film—a fantastic world right beside our own uncovered by a tragic everyman, some truly frightening scenes, a hushed colour palate and a self-reflexive narrative (courtesy of a film reviewer played by Bob Balaban). Where all that stuff worked in Unbreakable, a realistic reworking of the superhero myth, here the fantasy is constantly at odds with the realism.

In then end, Lady in the Water trickles away like diarrhea down an incontinent's leg, proving that sometimes, heartless, artless Hollywood corporations are right. How's that for a moral to the fairytale?

DAVE ALEXANDER

Uma's got no soul

She's just super-bad

MY SUPER EX-GIRLFRIEND
Directed by Ivan Reitman, Starring Uma Thurman, Luke Wilson, Rainn Vaughn, and Eddie Izzard, Now Playing, ☆☆☆☆

UMA... UNBELIEVABLY AWFUL MOVIE: unbelievably awful movie.... Uma.

What the hell was she thinking? That it would be a good thing to star in a flick with a lame, sexist premise and the lesser Wilson brother?

Speaking of whom, dude has enough alcoholic facial bloat going on to qualify him for honorary Baldwinship Not the most endearing quality for the lead in a romantic comedy, but Thurman fares no better really—beautiful as she is, it's completely negated by her rotten hamboning.

So here's what some hack likely got a good chunk of change to come up with: "typical" New York bachelor Wilson is on the prowl. Aiding and abetting in the Vince Vaughn role of the piggish, pasty, chinless, bad-advice giving sidekick: Rainn Wilson as, get this, "Vaughn"(sample line: "Did you visit the female nation and spread some democracy" Ha—oh stop it. No, really, please just stop…).

By chance encounter, of course, Matt (Luke Wilson) hooks up with mousy (represented by brown wig and glasses) Jenny (Thurman), who happens to lead a double life as the super-hero G-Girl. She's also a psychotically possessive, needy woman—as super-heroes are wont to be.

Despite "super" sex, Wilson ditches the freak, and revenge of the she-devil hijinks ensue in the manner of a Classic Screwball Comedy. We really only know this by the scales of plucky strings on the soundtrack used to signify wacky banter—and as irritating as that is, it's actually fairly useful—otherwise we'd have no idea why these people are engaging in such flaccid dialogue whilst mugging for the camera.

As an added bonus, we get a craptacular subplot involving Thurman's ex-high school sweetheart (Eddie Izzard) turned mad villain.

Point is, not a single line rings true or remotely funny. The acting? Forced and embarrassing.

I suppose the filmmakers were aiming for some comedic insight into the battle of sexes, complete with valuable life lessons learned. Fair enough, let's walk away from this mess with some useful feedback.

Uma, chill. Give Quentin a call. It'll be all right. Luke, stop hitting the clubs so often. Tell that idiot brother of yours to get a haircut. And start writing some decent material together again like you used to. And Vince Jr.? Fuck off. Version 1.0 is bad enough.

Keane observer

Director really gets up in disturbed man's face

KEANE
Directed by Lodge Kerrigan, Starring Damian Lewis, Abigail Breslin, Amy Ryan, Metro Cinema, (Zeidler Hall, Citadel Theatre)

WILLIAM KEANE WANDERS A NEW York City bus station, frantically looking for his eight-year-old daughter, kidnapped there months before. He takes out a newspaper clipping to show to strangers, but is brushed off. He checks the schedules and tries to imagine how the abduction could have taken place. He's coming unhinged, which is to be expected—this is the kind of nightmare that haunts most parents—but in this case, there appears to be even more to the story.

There's no question of his desperation, but whether or not he's in his right mind is another one entirely—his buttonholing of strangers, consumption of alcohol and cocaine, and general trigger-happy behavior bespeak a man on the edge. You feel embarrassed and sympathetic for him, but also start to wish for some distance. Frantically questioning passerby, angrily shouting and snarling, washing himself in public toilets, Keane is a man on edge, and it's not very long before you wonder whether the missing daughter story is just another delusion.

Writer/director Lodge Kerrigan, shoves you into Keane's world right from the top of the film. Watching him make the rounds is a tough go—Kerrigan keeps the camera close, clinically scanning his character's face for every tic, remorseless as an industrial documentary.

The film is pretty much a one-man show for Damian Lewis (Band of Brothers). As Keane, Lewis is note perfect. Whether muttering snatches of possible kidnap scenarios to himself in the bus station, creepily haunting a kid's store, assaulting possible suspects, or singing perhaps the most unnerving version of the Four Top's "I Can't Help Myself" that you'll ever hear, he's exactly the sort of person you'd give a wide berth to in real life.

He's barely surviving on a disability cheque in a run down hotel room when he meets Lynn Bedik (Amy Ryan) and daughter Kira (Abigail Breslin) who have taken a room down the hall from him. It's inevitable that seven-year-old Kira comes to remind Keane of his daughter, and gradually he forms a bond with the two—a friendship that will test him when Lynn asks him to babysit Kira.

Shot in the most unsparing, matter-of-fact way possible, Keane wanders the same grim psychic terrain as the director's first film, Clean, Shaven—which was another story about a schizophrenic attempting to locate his daughter. Kerrigan offers nothing in the way of solace, cheap sympathy ploys, or easy answers to the audience—instead he takes the most pitiless route possible. He never once releases his subject from the intense and unblinking gaze of the camera, or reprieves him from his jumpy, inchoate anger or pain—except ever so slightly in the presence of Kira. This makes for a heartbreaking movie experience, and also a truthful one.

With remarkable performances by both Ryan and Breslin (as a wounded soul herself), and a masterful one by Lewis, Keane is the sort of film that you owe it to yourself to watch, but won't necessarily feel comfortable with.

capsule film reviews

Clerks II Director Kevin Smith sacrifices some of the shoestring charm of the original, but the bigger budget and 12 years of filmmaking experience result in a funnier, less tedious, though certainly not less vulgar movie. Many of Smith's idiosyncrasies are in evidence—his inability to write plausible female characters, his penchant for in-jokes, and his inability to get serious without getting seriously goopy. On the plus side, Clerks II is way more visually fun than the original, and the juvenile vulgarity is so unflagging that it ultimately beats you into submission until, punch-drunk, you laugh at every dick/pussy/donkey joke despite yourself. ★★★☆☆ (SL)

Click Adam Sandler's most toned down and sincere comedy to date. The first half is a fluffy romp, as Sandler fools around with a magical remote that gives him the power to control his life fools around with the pause, mute, and fast forward options in order to get out of irritating situations. The second half delves into more serious territory, with the central metaphor allowing room for plenty of Adam Sandler's trademark good-hearted-slacker routine. ★★★★☆ (EV)

The Devil Wears Prada Only marginally faithful to the book, The Devil Wears Prada is the tale of Andy Sachs (Anne Hathaway), an unfashionable, aspiring "journalist" who, though unqualified, is hired y editor Miranda Priestly (Meryl Streep). What started as a searing roman a def ends as a harmless it of Hollywood fluff, an elaborate excuse to see Hathaway scramble around New York City in gorgeously designed outfits that take precedence over character development. The moral of the movie is supposed to be "hold on to your integrity or become a vapid drone." It's no spoiler to say that Andy eventually finds a way to free herself; the movie, however, never does. ★★☆☆☆ (EV)

Keane Reviewed on p. 30

An Inconvenient Truth Al Gore has been walking off the sting of George Bush's election theft by switching to the Jeremiah mode caught in David Guggenheim's documentary An Inconvenient Truth, which follows the former vice-president as he traverses the planet to talk about global warming and its consequences on the environment. His mission takes him from American towns to European and Asian cities, pounding his message out through sheer endurance and stubbornness. ★★★☆☆ (TM)

Lady in the Water Reviewed on p. 28

The Lake House Keanu Reeves amiably portrays the baffled architect Alex Wyler, who finds refuge from his immensely succesful father in a house by a lake, where a note leads him to contact former tenant Sandra Bullock. It soon transpires that Alex lives two years in her past, or maybe Kate (Bullock) lives two years in his future. But what perfect romance doesn't seem unbelievable in hindsight? The Lake House is competent, enjoyable and a pleasant reminder that true love need not be bound by space or time. ★★★★☆ (LL)

L'Enfant Reviewed on p. 26

Little Man Marlon Wayans plays a two-and-a-half-foot-tall jewel thief who pretends to be a baby in order to steal back a $100,000 diamond. Hands up anyone who can't figure out what occurs next. It's a Wayans brothers movie, which means that it's all about pee, poop, boobs, farts, knees to the groin and mild sexual or racial humour. They filmed it, and we are all poorer for it. ★☆☆☆☆ (TM)

Mission: Impossible III Tom Cruise's tough guy is in constant conflict with the entire world, attempting to stare down the opposition before exploding in an exaggerated display of childish violence. MI:3 is a drama in which action masks the limited presence of plausibility, charm, and eloquence in a surprisingly entertaining romp about good guys stopping a bad guy for some reason or other, a drama not so shallow as to seem entirely devoid of depth, yet light enough to be useful on one of those rainy summer evenings. ★★★☆☆ (LL)

Monster House Reviewed on p. 35

My Super Ex-Girlfriend Reviewed on p. 28

Nacho Libre Failed catch phrases, odd characters, bad slapstick. Jack Black's humour is wholly underutilized as his character spends most of the movie mugging awkwardly at the camera while speaking stilltedly in a bad Mexican accent. Nacho Libre seems to have been planned as sort of a spiritual successor to director Jared Hess' first film, Napoleon Dynamite, but Nacho just feels like an attempt to recapture the magic with weaker material. ★★☆☆☆ (JE)

The Omen Following the plot of the original Omen with minor changes to accommodate current events, the 2006 remake spends less time exploring the devil-child topic than it does on special effects. The film's strengths lie—as they did with the original—with the veterans performers As for the updates, the seemingly endless repetition of the number of the Beast and its predictable connection to the release date is silly, and the attempt to present recent events as supernatural despite their completely natural origins is nonsensical. You're better off tracking down the original at the local video shack. ★★☆☆☆ (LL)

Peaceful Warrior College gymnast (Scott Mechlowicz) feels like he's losing his focus but meets, a snowy-haired mystic character (Nick Nolte). What follows is predictable: Guru suggests a number of seemingly pointless and inane tasks that are trash-talked by the pupil until he breaks down and actually does them, finding that he's learning hidden wisdom—while the guru spouts go-get-'em mantras so vague as to be meaningless. Only Mechlowicz's performance, combined with some interesting character development and gymnastic sequences, saves the movie from being utterly predictable slush. But only barely. ★★☆☆☆ (EV)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest The next installment of Disney's based-on-a-theme-park freebooter flick is only half a story—you get the rest in 2007—and it's only two thirds as good as the original film. Jack (Johnny Depp), Elizabeth (Keira Knightley), and Will (Orlando Bloom) try to outwit each other and the supernatural again... but only Davy Jones (Bill Nighy) seems the list bit interesting. The rest is passable action/comedy, but adds no lustre to the first film's highly successful, middle of the road booty. ★★★☆☆ (KW)

A Prairie Home Companion A Prairie Home Companion is much closer to being "classic" Altman than something like Gosford Park, even if in the end it never really goes anywhere in particular. Standouts include Meryl Streep as a ditzy fading country star, Woody Harrelson and John C. Reilly as the flatulent and irreverent singing duo of Dusty and Lefty (who, incidentally, deliver Keillor's song "Bad Jokes" with suitable panache), and Tom Keith, the real sound effects guy from the show. The much heralded appearance of Lindsay Lohan is a bit of a letdown, though. ★★★☆☆ (CN)

Poseidon Wolfgang Petersen's remake of the disaster classic features foolish special effects and little suspense. Petersen's old self appears fleetingly, but mostly Poseidon feels like the last 10 minutes of Air Force One, over and over again. The actors are mostly C-list. Kurt Russell is the ensemble's anchor, let's put it that way. Of the film's other characters, the less said the better. ★☆☆☆☆ (JW)

A Scanner Darkly Richard Linklater's rotoscope-animated adaptation of Philip K. Dick's classic sci-fi novel is one of the most faithful adaptations of Dick's work ever to hit theatres. Featuring excellent performances by Woody Harrelson, Robert Downey Jr. and, gasp, even Keanu Reeves, Scanner is a hallucinatory trip into the mind of an increasingly spaced out junkie (Reeves), addicted to the powerful Substance D. The hook is that Reeves isn't just an addict, but a narcotics agent as well, spying on his friends and even on himself as he falls deeper into addiction, all under the watch of a frighteningly believable near-future police state. ★★★★☆ (MH)

Scoop Reviewed on p. 27

Superman Returns The effects are influenced by The Matrix, Brandon Routh's boyish charm and charisma suggest an earlier era without aping it. Superman's quest for truth, justice and the American way has taken a back seat to his love for Lois Lane (Kate Bosworth), as Supes discovers that Earth don't need him anymore. The result is ok, but considering the myriad of roads that could have been taken in the mythology, the new trilogy's first entry plays it distressingly soapy and safe. ★★★☆☆ (MH)

United 93 A hard film to watch, with none of the firm resolve you expect from a Hollywood movie. There's no respite, and it's all very painful to watch, from the first few scenes of the 9/11 hijackers preparing in their hotel rooms for the flight that will fail to reach its target, to the final few minutes of crying and yelling, Barry Ackroyd's shaky hand held camera catching a blur of arms and feet desperately racing towards the cockpit to wrest control as the plane plummets inexorably to the ground. ★★★★☆ (TM)

X-Men: The Last Stand Sadly, probably the weakest of the three X-Men films in that most difficult to pin down way: simply being boring, subtly collapsing under its own tendrils, and boasting terrible dialogue. There's a big CGI fight here, but you know it's all going to come down to Wolverine and Phoenix, so even a couple prominent characters dying just feels like filler. ★★☆☆☆ (FG)

You, Me and Dupree After building a career providing solid support to the likes of Jackie Chan, Ben Stiller, and Eddie Murphy, Owen Wilson gets more time up front with You, Me and Dupree. Unfortunately, first-time screenwriter Mike LaSieur builds his temple to Wilson's laid-back surfer cool on a shaky foundation, unsure whether they want their film to be a laugh-out-loud comedy or something a little more tense and dramatic. It's a damn shame, considering the presence of Kate Hudson, Matt Dillon, and Michael Douglas in the supporting cast, and that directors Anthony and Joe Russo have such a strong pedigree from their work on TV's Arrested Development. ★★☆☆☆ (MH)

EIGHT DAYS A WEEK

PICK OF THE WEEK

ILLUMINATE, CITADEL THEATRE

An evening to benefit the Zebra Children's Protection Centre, featuring plenty of multicultural eye candy from Bollywood Dancers, Flamenco En Vivo, Isokan Afrika, Yoga Loft demonstration, stellar fashion show, plus live music & a digital arts showcase. Surely the most unique charity event to hit the scene this summer. July 29. (9829-101A Ave.)

THURSDAY 27

PATSY AMICO & BRIAN GREGG, TASTE OF EDMONTON

Enjoy folksy harmonies whilst scarfing down wondrous food samplings. Amico and Gregg will be featured at the City Centre Stage until TOE end Saturday. (Sir Winston Churchill Square)

FRIDAY 28

EBONY, RED STRAP MARKET

Got hiccups? For a good spook see Edgar Allen Poe's The Black Cat and Masque of the Red Death, adapted by Pounding Nails Productions for stage. Until Aug 6th. (10305-97 St.)

SATURDAY 29

CAPTAIN TRACTOR, SIDETRACK CAFÉ

Captain Tractor teams with Canary Mine for a show not to be missed. Tractor's much anticipated album, North of the Yellowhead, has finally hit the racks with a vengeance, and promises an array of alt-rock for every taste. (10238-104 St.)

SUNDAY 30

KEANE & L'ENFANT, METRO CINEMA

Both films profile the plights of two very different fathers the one in Keane struggles with his daughter's mysterious disappearance, while the one in L'Enfant intentionally sells his baby. Nice work! (Zieldler Hall, Citadel Theatre)

MONDAY 31

OTHER VOICES SUMMER LAUNCH, CAFÉ SELECT

Other Voices is a bi-annual, volunteer-run magazine featuring international and local literary, and visual artists. The Summer 2006 issue should prove to be fantastic heat-wave reading material. (8409-109 St.)

TUESDAY 1

WITHOUT END & VISITANT, HARCOURT HOUSE GALLERY

Chantal Gervais' photographs treat "corporeality," while Jill Watamaniuk's Visitant depicts hallucinatory images. Either way, William Burroughs would likely approve. (10215-112 St.)

WEDNESDAY 2

DIY WEDNESDAY, NEW CITY SUBURBS

Every Wednesday New City offers four up-and-coming local bands. This week, Agaperaygunexperiment, Cockatoo, Storyboard, and Profunda Rosa. $5 cover plus drink specials equal a great Wednesday. (10081 Jasper Ave.)

NEXT THURSDAY 3

BUDDHISM – PHILOSOPHY OF LIVING LECTURE, SGI EDMONTON

Forget the heat, your body is an illusion. Learn a bit more about Buddhism from Tony Meers, director of Soka Gakkai International Canada. This will be the first of a series of lectures on the topic. Info: sgiedmonton@hotmail.com. (2nd floor, 10711-107 Ave.)

MONSTER HOUSE
Directed by Gil Kenan. Starring the voices of Steve Buscemi, Maggie Gyllenhaal, Nick Cannon, Catherine O'Hara. Now playing.

STEVEN SPIELBERG HAS SPENT THE LAST decade or so proving to the world that there's more to him than the brainiac inner child who made E.T. and Close Encounters. But while Schindler's List and Saving Private Ryan have elevated his stature somewhat, he continues to enjoy box-office success as executive producer of low-brow hits like Men in Black and Back to the Future. Of course, Spielberg has also experienced the lows of failure with 1941. And Robert Zemeckis, his one-time protégé, has experienced both the flush success of Back to the Future and Forrest Gump, as well as the disappointments of What Lies Beneath and Cast Away.

Monster House seems to be the result of the two of them trying to resurrect Hitchcock and Kubrick for a fluffy kids' ghost story.

The film tells the story of DJ (Mitchel Musso), a lonely, bored 14-year-old left alone by his self-obsessed parents (Fred Willard and Catherine O'Hara), who pooh-pooh his obsession with the house next door. Its menacing owner Nebbercracker (Steve Buscemi) constantly screams at kids who dare to trespass on his lawn. DJ, eye constantly pressed to his telescope (think Jimmy Stewart in Rear Window), is sure the house is haunted. But nobody believes him...

Monster House is the first family film that had me thinking about both Hitchcock's Rear Window and The Shining's hotel, and it's permeated by a weird sense of the macabre. Nebbercraker even looks like Nicholson's crazed Jack Torrance. Astute filmgoers will appreciate such references, and they'll marvel at the shading that Buscemi brings to Nebbercracker, the least neglected character. Teens will groove on the living, breathing thrill ride of a house and on the kids' authentic dialogue. But the extremely young will have the living shit scared out of them by tales of ghosts and death.

Newbie 29-year-old director Gil Kenan has a promising sense of style that will be exciting to watch with better scripts. But Monster House is a cynical mixed bag that fully pleases no one.

CRUISIN' THE COSMOS

with THE KID

JULY 27 TO AUGUST 2

LEO: (July 23 - Aug. 22)
Y'know, despite all the hootin' there is one thing that dogs and cats have in common-you [illegible] to realize your will. This week's one of 'em!

VIRGO: (Aug. 23 - Sept 22)
What started out in peace and harmony has recently become a struggle for supremacy. [illegible] take advantage and put their import to the test!

LIBRA: (Sept 23 - Oct. 22)
Decisions, decisions. [illegible] Before you've got no choice but to sit, make like Nike(tm) and just do it!

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
This week, [illegible] dance number and sing a song. Don't fight it 'cause you're afraid o' lookin' silly, since you'll find pain impulsive is the best thing to do. Get real nutty and your dreams could come true!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
Just 'cause there ain't no waves it don't mean [illegible] ain't see the tide have no weirdness, you've been cutenessy! It can't not difficult to be smooth when you don't even move. Of course, when you're dead in the water like this, some crew members get crazy and some go amiss. Get ready

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19)
Y'know the sayin' "subdora as a billy goat"? [illegible] Whatever endeavor you're presently involved in, [illegible] anywhere you won't [illegible] wanna realize all of your ambitions!

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18)
You ain't just startin' a new chapter in life, you're startin' a whole new novel. Even better, it's [illegible] 'cause it's on your choices that the outcome depends!

PISCES: (Feb. 19 - March 20)
Ain't it funny how fantasy and reality [illegible] While you see yourself as talented and successful, you're findin' the [illegible] ain't as good as you thinks, or right now the real world sucks. [illegible] dreams!

ARIES: (March 21 - April 19)
This week you've gotta be like an [illegible] yourself! Today, start thinkin' every decision does, like jumpin' into a [illegible] before it's gotten cold, lookin' like a ladder hangin' [illegible] an angry [illegible]

TAURUS: (April 20 - May 20)
Some joker put a few square feet of Astroturf in [illegible] green grass? Now you've spended all your time smilin' [illegible] ain't kin no figure out new ice skatin. [illegible]

GEMINI: (May 21 - June 20)
This week, in your pursuit of repute, [illegible] you don't say sup, or [illegible] 'cause you're so stunned-down but you can't stay afraid of life forever. [illegible]

CANCER: (June 21 - July 22)
[illegible] Pisces. The point: Someone in Aloha Centauri is pickin' the spot in step up with you when you're [illegible] and [illegible] you're [illegible] bowed.

GLOBAL VISIONS PRESENTS: OUR OWN PRIVATE BIN LADEN Metro Cinema, Ziedler Hall, Citadel Theatre, 9828-101A Ave., 425-9212 — July 27 7pm. Iranian-born director Samira Goetschel deconstructs the media's representations of terrorists and the war or terror, and analyzes the political and economic agendas funding the Taliban that spawned the contemporary Islamic jihad. The film emphasizes the propaganda disguising the "real" war being fought over economic resources, and the massive profits for the victors.

KEANE Metro Cinema, Ziedler Hall, Citadel Theatre, 9828-101A Ave., 425-9212 — Fri & Sun 9 pm, Sat & Mon 7 pm. Damian Lewis plays William Keane, a distraught father who tries to cope with the purported abduction of his daughter. While struggling to maintain his sanity, he meets a young mother and her daughter, who help him begin to deal with his loss and fill the void left by his own child's disappearance.

L'ENFANT Metro Cinema, Ziedler Hall, Citadel Theatre, 9828-101A Ave., 425-9212 — Fri & Sun 7 pm, Sat & Mon 9 pm. Directors Jean-Pierre & Luc Dardenne team up for their 2nd Cannes Palme d'Or Award (after 1999's Rosetta). L'Enfant profiles Jimmy, a new father and petty criminal, who sells his baby to the black market. After realizing the consequences of his actions, he sets out to undo them, leading him to a powerful personal transformation.

Harmful fantasy

Creating unrealistic expectations, 100 titles at a time

MY MESSY BEDROOM
JOSEY VOGELS

"NETHER LIPS?" I ASK.

"Yeah, I guess it's like 'nether region' but specifically the lips," Miss Former Harlequin Romance Copy Editor tells me over the phone. "I've still got the verboten word list right here."

"Jism" is out too. So is "wang," "cocksucker," "cunt," "slit," and "pubic hair." Ditto "semen" and "urinate."

Clearly, Harlequin has a problem with bodily fluids. In fact, says Miss H ("in case I work for them again," she says), while fellatio practically never happens in these books, even if it does, the guy never comes.

"I guess it ruins the fantasy having to deal with the spit or swallow issue," she laughs. "I mean how do you eloquently swallow or wipe your mouth."

Obviously, I don't expect romance novels to offer of anatomical play-by-play, but given the fact that a Harlequin is sold every five seconds, and mostly to women, I find the way they handle sex a little disturbing.

According to Miss H, who read hundreds of the things in the time she worked for Harlequin, not only is fellatio rare, when it does happen, the men usually stop the women midway so they can have intercourse, which is almost always in the missionary position, and during which she orgasms "100 per cent of the time," says Miss H.

ORGASM ORGY

NO WONDER WOMEN END UP THINKING blowjobs are yucky and feeling inadequate because they don't come during intercourse.

"I know these books are fantasy, but where do you draw the line between fantasy and reality," she says. "I think it's misleading to have women read about characters who come from intercourse every time and whose male partner requires only a little bit of effort on her part and who never makes a mess."

And while, sure, most of the adult women readers know the sex isn't realistic, Miss H is more concerned about the 17, 18, and 19-year-old readers ending up with false expectations about sex, or worse, feeling like there is something wrong with them because they don't come during intercourse because the truth is, most women don't.

There are some positive messages about sex in these books, says Miss H.

Condoms are always used, for example, unless pregnancy is part of the plot, she says.

And while fellatio is mostly verboten (it's usually only found in the racier lines that have popped up in recent years), cunnilingus is quite common, says Miss H.

"Understandably, its couched in sweet, romantic terms," she adds. "They don't use words like 'pussy' or 'cunt,' though 'clit' is often allowed.

So it would be, 'He moved lower, dropping kisses along her belly, then finally reaching the juncture of her thighs,' or 'he tasted her juices.'"

I guess women's bodily fluids are more acceptable.

She also gets to come. At least that's what I think they're talking about when it says that, "ecstasy ripples throughout her body as she goes over the edge."

"Romance novels account for almost 40 per cent of all fiction sold"

I doubt they're talking about cliff diving.

Of course, romance novels practically invented euphemisms. Its no wonder so many women are too embarrassed to talk dirty.

YOU HAVE A BEAUTIFUL MOUND

WHILE "DICK" OR "COCK" (ALWAYS THROB bing, of course) is acceptable in some of the racier lines, I can't say that I've ever referred to my man's penis as "velvet on steel," one of the common descriptions Miss H. has come across.

And I know "vagina" isn't the prettiest word, but is "mound" really any better?

I ask Miss H how she managed to keep a straight face while reading lines like "he entered her at the apex of her thighs" or "he entered her at her opening." What, like her art opening?

"You do have to buy into it," she laughs. "It's similar to going to a movie like the Terminator or Alien. If you spend the whole time thinking about how unrealistic it is you won't enjoy it. As long as everyone knows its fantasy, it's harmless."

I'm not so sure. Especially given that romance novels account for almost 40 per cent of all fiction sold and that Harlequins are translated into 25 languages and sold in almost 100 countries worldwide.

It's like young guys learning unrealistic sexual scripts from porn.

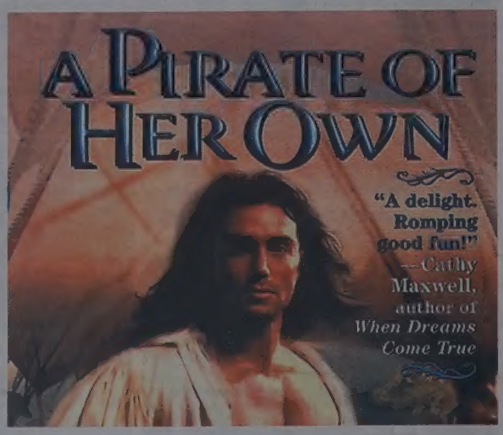
"Yeah, guys end up wanting her to be a slut in the bedroom and women are expecting romance, and to have all of their needs automatically met," Miss H agrees. "It's no wonder men and women have such a hard time getting it together sexually."

Which is why, I suppose, women end up reading romance novels.

In romance novels, she always gets her guy, says Miss H.

"And there's always a happy ending, though of course, 99.9 per cent of the time, that means marriage," she adds. "They never just end up together in a relationship."

Which is just as well, I suppose, because we all know once a gal's wrangled a guy into marriage, blowjobs are pretty much off the menu anyway, right?



Getting cuddly from kinky

Moving cautiously from the dungeon to dating

I MET A GUY THROUGH A BDSM CHATROOM. IT seemed like the perfect no-risk adventure sex—he's dom, I'm sub; he's sexy as all get-out, I'm fat in all the places he likes girls to be fat. So we hook up. But instead of the one-time adventure I was expecting, we hook up again and again. We talk for hours on the phone and hang out naked watching TV and eating Chinese food. It's been a couple of months now, and I really like this guy. Usually "dom" guys are not people I would want to spend five minutes with outside of the bedroom. But we seem to go effortlessly from friends and equals to mind-shatteringly orgasmic power-exchange fucking, which always seems to end up sweet and slow and feeling a lot more like lovemaking.

Should I just let things be good and enjoy it and see where it goes? Or should there be an official "this is now a relationship and I am opening myself up to the possibility of a future with you" discussion? I am just so terrified of being dismissed as a potential partner because of the way we met. What if men (or at least this man) can have not just casual sex without feeling attached, but also casual naked Chinese without feeling attached—as long as they have already classified the woman in their head as a fantasy-fulfillment booty call?

Sex Crazed Adventures Rarely Evolve Development

If you want to scare this boy off, SCARED, then sit his ass down for an Official Discussion (OD) and unilaterally upgrade this thing from fantasy-fulfillment booty calls to Serious Relationship. No one—men, women, gay, straight, kinky, vanilla—likes to be informed that they are now, like it or not, and without any prior consultation, entangled in a Very Serious Relationship.

Even if this boy is open to getting serious—if he's not the kind of guy who would rule you out because of how you met—eight weeks is way too soon for an OD. Badly handled, your OD could put him on the defensive, SCARED, and make him view any future mind-shatteringly orgasmic power-exchange fuck sessions as some sort of implied commitment, one that he may not be ready to make. If that happens, you can say goodbye to both the fuck sessions and the possibility of a future.

However, you should let him know how you're feeling, SCARED, and you can do it without tossing down lightning bolts like "this is now a relationship" and "I am opening myself up to the possibility of a future with you." Try something simpler and sweeter, something truthful but less thunderclappy, something like: "I'm totally digging you as a dom, which I expected after our chats, and also as a person, which I totally didn't expect. I hope we can keep on fucking and hanging out." He'll catch your drift, I guarantee you, and he'll appreciate your ability to let things develop naturally and without any hurry-up ODs. Then chill the fuck out, enjoy the sex and the Chinese, and see where it goes.

SAVAGE LOVE

Finally, SCARED, if this guy is the type who would dismiss you as a potential partner because of how you met, well, you really can't do anything about that, can you? It would be extremely foolish for him to dismiss you for that reason, though—and if he does, SCARED, you can tell him I said so. It's rare for a truly kinky person to meet someone with whom he's sexually and emotionally compatible. (Am I right, kinksters?) If this dom boy has any sense at all he's already picturing a future with you.

I'm a 100 per cent straight guy from Toronto, very good looking, all that shit. My girlfriend took me to a gay bar in Vancouver, where she's going to school, and this good-looking femme boy started coming on to me. My girlfriend asked me to make out with him because she thought it would be hot. Long story short: He came back to her place with us where he acted as my personal fluffer. He blew me while I ate out the girlfriend, stroked me after I put the condom on, and in general did everything he could to keep me rock hard—for the girlfriend. Then I fucked the hell out of my girl while my fluffer licked my balls and ass. I never came so hard in my life. I thought I was going to shoot a few vertebrae right out of my dick. I want to do this again, my girlfriend wants to do this again, and my personal fluffer wants to do this again. No real problem here, Dan, but do you think I should turn in my straight-guy card now?

Boy Into New Orgasmic Ways

No, BINOW, I don't think you should turn in your straight-guy card—but only because this whole scenario will be a whole hell of a lot less horny for your personal fluffer if you suddenly start identifying as bi. I would have to turn in my fag card if I ruined this for him. So you can keep telling your fluffer you're 100 per cent straight, he can keep pretending to believe you, and your girlfriend can keep enjoying the show. You don't have to thank me—just send some video.

Hi, I am a 21-year-old female in a loving relationship. My problem is that I never come during sex. My boyfriend gets frustrated and takes it personally. The only time I ever have an orgasm is while using a vibrator or a faucet—it doesn't even happen when I play with myself manually. I don't know why, but I just... don't. I've been told that it's a psychological thing. Also, it could have something to do with my past. I was raised really Christian and for a long time I felt guilty about having lustful thoughts and sexual desires. I feel like something could be wrong with me. Why is it so easy for everyone else? I want to have a healthy sex life, not just while I'm alone but with men. What should I do?

Feeling Unbecoming

While I'm naturally inclined to blame just about any sexual or social dysfunction on a conservative Christian upbringing, FU, I'm afraid that we can't pin your orgasm issues on bible thumpers. Most women—the best estimates put it at 75 per cent—can't come from vaginal intercourse alone, and a large number of women can't come from manual stimulation alone either. We've covered this before, but it bears repeating: Lots of women need additional, focused, intense, direct clitoral stimulation—you know, the kind of buzz you get from your vibrator and faucet. It's not a psychological thing, FU, it's a physiological thing, and the sooner you accept that your body needs those extra boosts—and the sooner you incorporate them into your lovemaking—the sooner you'll start coming during sex.

Here's what you do: While your boyfriend fucks you, go at yourself with your vibrator. Show him how you get yourself off. Then once he's seen how it's done, hand him the vibrator and tell him he can be a baby about it and sulk, or be a man about it and get the job done. And if he wants to do it all with his dick, send him to the Couples' Vibrators section of www.babeland.com, where he'll find a selection of vibrators he can wear on his cock. You can have a healthy sex life that incorporates vibrators, FU, you just have to make peace with the way your body works.
